Durwans.—The Company employs three classes of durwans, namely, durwan, bill durwan and havildar. The garage durwan gets Rs. 35 but the other durwans get Rs. 40 to Rs. 47. The bill durwans get Rs. 40 and the havildars Rs. 45 to Rs. 50. The Union demanded a uniform grade for all these durwans. The original demand was Rs. 50—5—100. The revised demand, however, is Rs. 50—2—80. The pay which the durwans and the havildars are now getting is inclusive of dearness allowance. I think that it will be sufficient if the grade of the durwans is fixed on the same scale as that of the semi-skilled workmen, namely, Rs. 35—1—50. They should get, in addition, dearness allowance at Rs. 25. The pay of the durwans and havildars should therefore be raised to Rs. 60 including dearness allowance.

Electricians.—The Company employs one electrician and some assistant electricians and some coolies described as electric coolies. The electrician gets Rs. 200. The assistant electricians get pay ranging from Rs. 100 to Rs. 150 and the coolies get Rs. 35. The Union demanded grades of Rs. 100—7½—250 for the electricians and Rs. 50—2—80 for the coolies. So far as the coolies are concerned, there is no reason why they should have a preferential treatment to other coolies. Their grade is fixed at Rs. 30—1—35 as in the case of unskilled workmen and they should get Rs. 25 as dearness allowance. For the electricians, whose present pay is inclusive of dearness allowance, the grade is fixed at Rs. 70—5—170. They will get dearness allowance at the same rate as skilled workmen mentioned above. The minimum pay including dearness allowance should therefore be fixed at Rs. 105 and the initial pay in the grade should be fixed on the principles mentioned above at the stage in the scale next above the existing basic pay calculated after deducting the dearness allowance from the present emoluments.

Butlers, boys and barmen.—The butlers in the employment of the Company generally get Rs. 30 and the boys get Rs. 20. The barmen or bar boys get Rs. 30. The low scale of pay of these employees has been strongly criticised by the Union. The Company is willing neither to increase their pay nor to grant them dearness allowance. The Company's case is that these employees are paid at low rates because they earn considerable sums from tips. In its statement the Company has estimated the earnings of these classes of employees from tips at Rs. 75 per month. It is well known that these employees do earn a lot from tips and the Union was also forced to concede this. The Union suggested that tips might be discontinued and these employees paid on the same scale as the other employees. The payment of tips is, however, a recognised practice in the hotels and restaurants and it is not possible to discontinue it. I think that in an institution like an hotel the fact that tips are earned should be taken into account in fixing the pay scale of the employees like the boys, barmen and butlers. In consideration of this fact, I do not propose to fix any dearness allowance for these classes of employees. So far as their pay is concerned, however, they should at least have the same pay and grade as the unskilled workmen. I, accordingly, fix the scale of pay for these classes of employees at Rs. 30—1—35. The boys who are getting Rs. 20 now should get Rs. 30 from the date the award will come into operation. These employees will not, however, get any dearness allowance.

There are some other classes of boys described as glass boys, cigarette boys, packing boys and khansamas. Glass boys get Rs. 30, cigarette boys Rs. 25, packing boys Rs. 29 to Rs. 41 and khansamas Rs. 30 to Rs. 37. It is not clear whether any of these boys also earn tips. They should have the same scale of pay as the unskilled workmen, namely, Rs. 30—1—35, and, if they do not earn any tips they should have the same dearness allowance as the unskilled workmen and their pay should be raised to Rs. 55.

Finally there are the office boys and bearers some of whom are highly paid. Thus, Mr. Alasia's boy gets Rs. 45, Mr. Corti's boy gets Rs. 50 and there are also bearers on Rs. 55 and Rs. 60. The office boys and bearers should generally have the same grade as that of the unskilled workmen with dearness allowance, but the more highly paid among them, i.e., those who are now getting Rs. 50 or more, should have the grade of durwans, i.e., Rs. 35—1—50, with dearness allowance at Rs. 25. Their pay should therefore be raised to Rs. 60.

There remain two more classes of employees, namely, the sweepers and the malis. The sweepers get pay ranging from Rs. 22 to Rs. 28 and the malis get Rs. 30 to Rs. 40. The sweepers all live within the premises of the hotel and restaurant and get their meals there. In view of this, they should not get any dearness allowance as in the case of the cooks. Since they are also allowed to live in the hotel premises, I think that a lower scale of pay should be fixed for them. Their pay scale is fixed at Rs. 25—1—30. The same pay scale is also fixed for the malis but they will get dearness allowance at Rs. 25, unless they get any meal or food from the hotel. If they get any food the value thereof should be deducted from the dearness allowance.

If any category of employee has been left out in the above enumeration, he should be given the same grade as that fixed for an employee doing analogous kind of work and dearness allowance should be paid to him as fixed above, provided that it he gets any meal or food from the hotel, the value thereof should be deducted from the dearness allowance.

Issue No. 5—(a) Transport allowance or free transport.

The Union has demanded that arrangement for free transport of the employees from their quarters to their places of duty as also for their return should be made by the Company and it is stated that the Company has got a large number of lorries which could be utilised for this purpose. This is a rather novel and extraordinary demand and the Union representatives felt as much, because at the time of hearing it was said that if a liberal scale of pay and dearness allowance were sanctioned by the Tribunal, the demand would not be pressed. I think that the scales of pay and dearness allowance sanctioned above should be considered liberal and sufficient to cover the cost of transport of the employees to their places of duty. The demand is accordingly rejected.

(b) Education allowance for the employees' children.

This demand which also was not pressed, if a liberal scale of pay and dearness allowance were sanctioned, is rejected on the same ground as the demand for transport allowance.

(c) House-rent allowance.

House-rent must also be deemed to be covered by the pay scales fixed and so the demand for separate house-rent allowance is rejected.

(d) Over-time allowance.

The Union demanded that over-time work should be paid for at the rate of one day's pay for three hours' over-time work on week days and at the rate of two days' pay for over-time work on Sundays and holidays. The Company has, however, stated that those employees who work on Sundays get a complete day's rest on some other day of the week. The workers of this establishment are all paid by month and there is no daily-rated worker even in the factory. The Company has agreed to pay one extra day's pay to workers who may be asked to work over-time and that ought to be sufficient. As regards the factory, over-time payment should be governed by the Factories Act, and I understand that it is so governed.

Issue No. 6 Bonus.

The Company pays one month's pay as bonus during Puja every year to the workers and is willing to continue to pay the same this year also. The Union demanded two months' pay as bonus. Since the scales of pay of the employees have been revised, I think that one month's pay as bonus which the Company is paying and is agreeable to pay this year also is sufficient under the circumstances. I, accordingly, direct that the Company should pay one month's pay as bonus to all its employees during Puja this year.

Issue No. 7—Retiring benefits.

The Company has started a Provident Fund to which it contributes 5 per cent. of each employee's pay every month. The employees are also required to contribute 5 per cent. of their pay. The Union has demanded that the contribution should be raised to 10 per cent. both ways and that the Provident Fund should be administered by "a collective body of employers and employees". So far as the rate of contribution is concerned, I think that it is somewhat lower than what is contributed in most of the industrial or business establishments and I direct that the rate of contribution, both for the employees and for the Company, should be fixed at 6¼ per cent. of the pay with effect from the date on which this award will come into operation. The Provident Fund was started in the year 1942 and is, therefore, in operation for a pretty long time. The demand for administration of the Provident Fund by representatives of employers and employees is impracticable and is therefore rejected. The Company objects to the granting of any gratuity as claimed by the Union. The claim of the Union is that gratuity to the extent of one month's salary should be paid in case of retirement, retrenchment, dismissal or death of an employee. On behalf of the Company it has been argued that the employees should be entitled to one kind of retiring benefit only and that since they are already in the enjoyment of one kind of benefit, in the shape of the Provident Fund, the claim for gratuity should be rejected. Reference has been made by the learned Counsel for the Company to the award of the Engineering Industries Tribunal, already mentioned, in which the Tribunal was of opinion that only one kind of retiring benefit could be claimed by the employees. I think that the same principle should be adopted in this case also and the claim for gratuity should be rejected. It is accordingly rejected.

Issue No. 8—Conditions of service.

(a) The Union demanded that all employees should be made permanent on completion of three months' service. This is agreed to by the Company and has been embodied in the Draft Standing Orders which have been filed. It is, accordingly, directed that all employees should be made permanent after three months' satisfactory service.

(b) Rules for dismissal and discharge.—The Draft Standing Orders, filed by the Company, provide that the employment of any permanent workmen may be terminated by one month's notice in writing in the case of monthly-rated workmen or by payment of one month's wages in lieu of such notice, and by two weeks' notice or payment of two weeks' wages in lieu thereof in cases of other workmen. The Union demanded that three months' notice should be given to all workers. I do not, however, see any justification for three months' notice and I find that no such claim was made in the written statement. The claim is, accordingly, rejected and the rule in the Draft Standing Orders accepted on this point.

As regards dismissal, the Union demanded that no employee should be dismissed unless he is found guilty of misconduct by a joint committee consisting of representatives of the Company and the Union, after giving the employee proper opportunities for meeting the charges laid against him. Adequate provision has been made in the Draft Standing Orders, submitted by the Company, for giving an opportunity to an employee for meeting the charges of misconduct brought against him. Rule 14 of the Draft Standing Orders mentions the acts or omissions which amount to misconduct and sub-rule (4) provides that no order of dismissal shall be made unless the worker concerned is previously informed in writing of the alleged misconduct and is given an opportunity to explain the circumstances alleged against him. It is next provided that the approval of the Board of Directors of the Company is required in every case of dismissal and that when circumstances appear to warrant it, the Board of Directors may institute independent enquiries before dealing with the charges against an employee. The original draft provided for approval of either the Manager or the Board of Directors, but, at the desire of the Union, the Company agreed to the approval of the Board of Directors instead of that of the Manager. Sub-rule (6) provides that in awarding punishment the Manager shall take into account the gravity of the misconduct, previous record of the employee and any other extenuating circumstances and that a copy of the order made by the Manager shall be supplied to the employee. The words "Board of Directors" should be substituted in place of "Manager" in this sub-rule in consonance with the change in sub-rule (4). Subject to these changes, sub-rules (4) and (6) which should be renumbered as sub-rules (3) and (5), as explained below, appear to afford adequate protection to an employee against wrongful dismissal. I do not see any justification for the claim that a joint committee of the representatives of the Company and the Union should be set up to judge an employee charged with misconduct. This would not only be impracticable but would interfere with the discretion of the Company in the matter. This claim is accordingly rejected. The Union has suggested some changes in the list of acts or omission which amount to misconduct.

Item No. (e) of this list enumerates taking or giving bribes or any illegal gratification as one of the acts of misconduct. To this an exception should be provided exempting the taking of customary tips. Taking of such tips should not be considered as acceptance of an illegal gratification. The Union also objected to the word "habitual" in item Nos. (f), (g), (h) and (i). I see no valid ground for the objection. Habitual absence or habitual late attendance or habitual breach of any established rule should amount to misconduct and I do not think that the word "habitual" is not sufficiently explicit. There is therefore no need for any change in these items.

As regards retrenchment, the Union demanded that there should be no retrenchment without the approval of the Union, that the employees who have completed 35 years of service should first be retrenched and thereafter the principle of "last come first go" should be applied, that the retrenched employees should be paid gratuity at the rate of one month's pay for every year of service and that in case of new appointments the retrenched employees should be given preference. The principle that there should be no retrenchment without the approval of the Union cannot be accepted. It is a matter within the discretion of the Company and will depend on the financial position and the condition of business of the Company at a particular point of time. No employer can be called upon to wait for the approval of the Union may make on the point. Such procedure I can only suggest that the Company should, if possible, inform the Union beforehand whenever any retrenchment is contemplated or decided upon, as this is a matter in which the Union is greatly interested, and consider any representation that the Union may make on the point. Such procedure is likely to induce the confidence of the Union and lead to greater co-operation between the Management and the Union. I only suggest this for consideration of the Company but do not want to make any binding award on the point. The demand that the employees who have completed 35 years of service should first be, retrenched is impracticable and cannot be accepted. It may be that the retention of service of such an employee will be more beneficial to the establishment on account of his experience than that of a comparatively junior employee. The other demand that the principle of "last come first go" should be adopted in making a general retrenchment is, however, reasonable and I direct the Company to adopt this principle as far as practicable in making retrenchments. I also accept the demand that in cases of new appointments, the retrenched hands should, other things being equal, be given preference and direct the Company to adopt this principle. The demand for payment of gratuity to retrenched hands cannot be accepted since the general demand for gratuity has been rejected. This is accordingly rejected.

(c) Promotion.—The Union's demand that a system of promotion to higher posts should be introduced is accepted by the Company. The Company should, as far as possible, fill up vacancies by promotion from the existing staff. The further demand that a committee should be formed with one representative from the Union to deal with this matter cannot, however, be accepted and is rejected.

(d) Working hours.—The working hours for clerks are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on week days and from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday. These are the usual hours to which no objection is possible. The Union demanded one hour's rest for tiffin, but actually tiffin is supplied by the Company to the clerks, as already stated. There is, therefore, no need for one hour's rest. The Factory workers work for eight hours and have recess for one hour after five hours' work. To this also there can be no objection Objection was mainly taken to the working hours of the cooks and the kitchen staff which are from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. and from 6-30 p.m. to 10-30 p.m. and it was demanded that there should be no break duty system. But this would be impossible in an establishment like an hotel or a restaurant. The cooks have to remain up to 3 p.m. to prepare and serve lunch and they are again to attend at 6-30 p.m. to prepare and serve dinner. In view of the fact that the cooks get their meals from the hotel and their scales of pay have been liberally fixed, I think that no objection should legitimately be taken to their hours of duty. Such hours should always be fixed according to the work to be done and the nature of the business of the establishment. No shifts are possible as the work in the evening occupies only four hours. Break duty is inevitable for the cooks and kitchen staff in an establishment like this. I do not, therefore, want to make any change in their hours of work. The factory hours do not apply to them as they are not factory workers and their work cannot be as strenuous or as continuous as that of workers in a factory. Within these hours they take their meals which means that they necessarily get some respite.

(e) Rules for recruitment.—The demand of the Union is that no recruitment should be made without previous consultation with the Union. This demand is altogether unreasonable as recruitment is a matter within the discretion of the Company which cannot be interfered with. It is therefore rejected. I would recommend, however, that the Company should, as far as possible, make appointments on the initial pay of the grades fixed, as demanded by the Union, though I do not want to make any binding award on the point as there may be circumstances when an employee will have to be appointed on a higher salary on account of his experience, age or superior qualifications. All employees should receive appointment letters on their first appointment On the question of recruitment of labour—though it is not a matter demanded by the Union—I would draw the attention of the Company to the work which is being done by the Employment Exchanges and suggest for its consideration whether such Exchanges should not be consulted whenever labour has to be recruited.

(f) Standing Orders.—I have already referred to the Draft Standing Orders filed by the Company. The Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act of 1946 applies to an industrial establishment employing 100 or more workmen. It appears, however, that the factory staff of the Company is less than 100 An hotel or restaurant does not appear to be an industrial establishment, as defined in the Payment of Wages Act, 1936. I do not think therefore that the Company can be directed to get the Draft Standing Orders certified under this Act. The Company has, however, agreed to adopt the Draft Standing Orders. These should be adopted with the changes already directed and these should guide the relations between the Company and its employees in future. A further change should be made, namely, clause (b) of rule 5 and sub-rule (1) of rule 14 should be omitted. Clause (c) of rule 5 should be renumbered as clause (b) and sub-rules 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of rule 14 should be renumbered as sub-rules 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5.

Issue No. 9—Leave and holidays.

The Company grants 15 days' privilege leave with full pay to the clerks and 10 days' holidays to the factory workers. The Union demanded one month's privilege leave with full pay which is to accumulate up to three months at a time, 12 days' casual leave with full pay and sick leave for three months with full pay. The Union also wanted holidays according to the Negotiable Instruments Act. Some holidays are enjoyed by the office staff of the Company but not by others. According to the very nature of the business, there cannot be any holiday for the working staff in an hotel or restaurant. The demand for holidays for all categories of workers cannot, therefore, be accepted, as it would bring the entire business to a standstill. In view of the fact, however, that no holidays are enjoyed by the staff excepting the office staff, I think that the staff should get some days' casual leave in a year. I direct that all categories of staff should get 7 days' casual leave in a year with full pay. So far as the privilege leave is concerned, 15 days' privilege leave with full pay should be considered to be adequate and this should be allowed to be accumulated for two years. All categories of staff should get this privilege leave and for the factory staff this will include the ten days' holidays under the Factories

Act. As regards sick leave, the Company has objected to the granting of any such leave but it has been stated that, as a matter of fact, the employees are granted sick leave when they are really sick. I think that there ought to be some provision for sick leave, since the Company allows such leave in cases of genuine sickness. Sick leave should, however, be granted on half pay as in the award of the Engineering Industries Tribunal, already mentioned. I accordingly direct that the Company should grant 15 days' sick leave in a year on half pay to all categories of employees who may be genuinely in need of it and that such leave should be sanctioned on production of medical certificate either from the Medical Officer of the Company or from any other registered medical practitioner.

Issue No. 10—Compensation for involuntary unemployment.

As there is no daily-rated worker in this establishment—all workers being monthly paid—no question of involuntary unemployment would ordinarily arise. What the Union wanted on this issue was compensation in the event of an employee not being able to attend on account of dislocation of transport, communal riots or such other kinds of unrest. These are, however, exceptional circumstances and if anybody is unable to attend on account of any such circumstances in future, it is expected that the Company will deal with his case leniently and, in any case, he will be entitled to take casual leave for the day.

Issue No. 11—Medical aid and facilities.

The Company has appointed a qualified doctor to treat the staff from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. daily. The Union wants that the doctor who now attends in the afternoon should attend in the morning. The management has agreed to this and undertaken to provide for attendance of the doctor for one hour at 11 a.m. in the morning. The Union also wants free medicines and states that the highly paid officers get medicines free of cost. This is denied by the Company and there is no evidence on the point. I cannot agree that the employees are entitled to free supply of medicines. The demand for free medicines is rejected.

Issue No. 12—Free tiffin and rest room.

The Company supplies tiffin free to some categories of employees, but because it does so, it cannot be saddled with an obligation to supply tiffin to everyone. The demand is therefore rejected. As regards rest room, the Company has pleaded want of space for providing a rest room. I would, however, recommend that the management should further investigate the position and provide a rest room for the employees, if possible.

Issue No. 13—Provision for more latrines.

The Company has undertaken to see to this grievance of the employees and provide for more latrine facilities. I leave the matter to the Company without making any binding award.

Issue No. 14—Provision for better chairs.

The demand on this head is that the Company should provide cane or wooden chairs for tin chairs. This matter is also left to the Company. If any employee feels any particular discomfort on account of the chairs supplied to him, the Company should change the chairs or make some other arrangement. I do not, however, want to make any binding award on this matter.

6. Power to prescribe fees.—(1) The Central Government may, from time to time, prescribe the fees to be levied in respect of any matter or thing done by a diplomatic or consular officer in the execution of his office.

(2) All such fees shall be levied, accounted for and applied and may be remitted in such manner as may be prescribed.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

Prior to the passing of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, British diplomatic and consular officers performed notarial duties in respect of Indian nationals abroad and charged fees therefor and for other consular functions for which fees were leviable. They were also authorised to administer oaths. Legal authority for the exercise of these functions existed in the Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891, and the Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889, passed by the English Parliament.

2. On the passing of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom ceased to have any responsibility in the matter. It has therefore become advisable to provide statutory authority for the fixation, levy and accounting of fees to be charged by Indian diplomatic and consular officers abroad and for the administration of oaths and the taking of affidavits by them in much the same manner as was done by British diplomatic and consular officers prior to the Indian Independence Act, 1947. Hence the present Bill.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The Reserve Bank of India, as at present constituted, is a privately owned institution incorporated by a special Act. With a view to implement the Government policy that the Bank should function as a State-owned institution and to meet the general desire that the control of Government over the Bank's activities should be extended to ensure a greater co-ordination of the monetary, economic and financial policies, this Bill has been framed to provide—

(1) for the acquisition of all shares of the Bank held by members of the public against payment of compensation;

(2) for enabling Government, after consultation with the Bank's Governor, to give directions to the Bank in matters of policy;

(3) for amending the constitution of the Central and Local Boards which at present mainly represent the shareholders;

(4) for effecting certain amendments including consequential amendments in the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934.

R. K. SHANMUKHAM CHETTY.

NEW DELHI;
The 5th August 1948.

NOTES ON CLAUSES.

Clause 3.—This clause provides for the compulsory transfer by law of all privately owned shares of the Bank to the Government and prescribes the rate and the manner in which payment for the shares will be made. It further provides for payment of dividend accrued up to 30th June 1948 and for the period between this date and the "appointed day".

Clause 4.—This clause provides for the vacation of offices by the existing Directors other than the Governor and the two Deputy Governors and by the members of the Local Boards on the "appointed day". Provision is made for fresh appointments under the new constitution of the Boards.

Clause 5.—This clause enables the Bank's Governor (or in his absence a Deputy Governor) to carry on the usual business of the Bank until such time as the new Central Board is constituted.

Clause 6.—This clause empowers the Central Government to lay down, inter alia, the manner in which claims for compensation payable may be made and in case of doubt, the persons to whom payment is to be made.

The Schedule.—(a) Amendment to section 7.—The object of this clause is to empower the Government to give directions to the Bank on matters of policy which the Bank will be obliged to carry out. Subject to such directions the Central Board will superintend and manage the business of the Bank according to the Act. Subject to regulations made by the Central Board, which require approval of the Government, the Bank's Governor will also exercise all powers vested in the Board.

(b) Amendment to sections 8 and 9.—Provides for the constitution of the Central and Local Boards of the Reserve Bank under State ownership. The period for which Directors and members of Local Boards hold office is reduced to four years and in case of members of the Central Board overlapping terms of office have been proposed to ensure continuity of policy.

(c) Amendment of sections 17 and 33.—In view of India's membership of the International Monetary Fund and the amendment of sections 40 and 41, the existing provision requiring the Bank to hold sterling securities and no other foreign securities as part of the Issue Department reserves against the liability for notes issued has become anomalous. The amendments now proposed will enable the Bank to hold, besides sterling, certain other foreign currency assets both in the Issue and Banking Departments.

West Ben. Ord. VIII of 1948.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The West Bengal Security (Amendment) Ordinance, 1948 (West Bengal Ordinance VIII of 1948), was promulgated by the Governor under sub-section (1) of section 88 of the Government of India Act, 1935, on the 3rd July, 1948, when the Provincial Legislature was not in session, as it was urgently felt necessary to remove certain doubts which had arisen as to the interpretation of certain provisions of the West Bengal Security Act, 1948 (West Bengal Act III of 1948), and also to make certain other amendments in the said West Bengal Act. Under sub-section (2) of section 88 of the Government of India Act, 1935, West Bengal Ordinance VIII of 1948 will cease to operate on the expiration of six weeks from the re-assembly of the Provincial Legislature. It is, therefore, necessary to incorporate the provisions of the said Ordinance in an Act of the Legislature. The present Bill has been prepared mainly for that purpose.

In the Bill it has also been proposed to make certain further amendments in West Bengal Act III of 1948, so as—

(1) to make the interference with certain essential service to be specified by the Provincial Government a subversive act as defined in the present Act;

(2) to provide that strikes or lock-outs which are illegal and punishable under the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, itself, may not be treated as industrial disputes excusing the commission of offences punishable under the present Act;

(3) to extend the existing power of controlling processions also to cases affecting the safety or stability of the Province;

(4) to provide for the regulation of entry into certain places and areas to be declared by the Provincial Government as protected places and protected areas respectively;

(5) to empower the Provincial Government, if necessary, to prohibit or restrict the movements of goods under certain circumstances;

(6) to make the offences under sub-section (5) of section 16 of the Act cognizable;

(7) to enhance from 3 months to 9 months the period during which ordinarily an order under section 16(1) shall remain in force;

(8) to make it beyond all possible doubts that an order of detention under sub-section (1) of section 16 may be reviewed by a Judge of the High Court more than once and while extending the original duration of such orders to limit the period of subsequent extensions;

(9) to provide for a general power for the police, when duly authorised, to search any place without warrant;

(10) to extend the period of detention in custody under section 30 of the Act from fifteen days to thirty days in order to facilitate the collection of materials and preparation of necessary papers for consideration of the Provincial Government; and (11) to make certain other minor alterations from the point of view of drafting.

For the Company—Mr. S. C. Sen, Advocate, instructed by Mr. N. Das Gupta, Pleader.

AWARD.

This industrial dispute between Messrs. H. Dutta & Sons, Ltd., and their employees as represented by H. Dutta & Sons, Ltd., Employees' Association, has been referred by Government order No. 2203Lab., dated 2nd July 1948, to me for adjudication under the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947.

The Company, besides carrying on business as such, are Managing Agents of the following Companies:—

(1) Mahaluxmi Cotton Mills, Ltd.
(2) Dehri Oil Refinery, Ltd.
(3) India Oil Plastics, Ltd.
(4) Dooars Assam Union Tea Co., Ltd.
(5) National Drug Co., Ltd.

The total number of employees at the Head Office in all the aforementioned concerns is about 57. Due to abnormal rise in prices and increased cost of living, the Employees' Association held a meeting on or about the 26th of July 1947, and submitted a charter of demands to the employer Company. Thereafter the Association on 6th December 1947 wrote to the Labour Commissioner, Government of West Bengal, that all attempts for amicable settlement had failed. The employers being persuaded by the Labour Commissioner intimated their decision about certain interim increments on 27th February 1948, but as the Association rejected the proposal, the dispute was referred to this Tribunal by the Government of West Bengal.

The following issues give details of the dispute as mentioned, in the written statement filed by the Union:—

(1) Recognition of the Union.
(2) Revision of pay and scales of pay and dearness allowance.
(3) Security of service and promotion.
(4) Whether the award will have a retrospective effect.
(5) Gratuity, annual bonus, Provident Fund.
(6) Working hours.
(7) Tiffin room furnished with some chairs, benches, drinking water and utensils.
(8) Imposition of fines.
(9) Leave, revision of Leave Rules.
(10) Relation Committee (Works Committee).

I impressed upon both parties to settle the issues between themselves and although each party expressed its inability to do so, I congratulate them on their being able to settle the majority of the points at issue amicably. The question of revision of pay and scales of pay and dearness allowance and the question of recognition of the Union, and finally the question as to whether the award will have retrospective effect could not be decided amicably between the parties, but all the other issues have been settled amicably between them. I, therefore, proceed to record next the amicable arrangements that have been arrived at between the parties on these respective issues and then to give my award on the remaining issues, where the parties failed to come to a compromise.

ISSUES WHICH HAVE BEEN AMICABLY SETTLED.

Issue No. 3.—Security of service and promotion.

Although the employees in their memorandum, Annexure A, appended to their written statement, at paragraph 5, claimed that the probationary period shall not exceed three months and that an employee confirmed after the expiry of this period shall not be dismissed or discharged except for fraud, yet it was agreed on both sides in my presence that the probationary period shall be three months and that if the management considers the probationer to be fit, the latter must have to be confirmed immediately after the expiry of the probationary period.

It was also agreed on both sides, in my presence that in serious cases of misconduct justifying dismissal of a confirmed employee, there should be a written charge sheet and that the representatives of the Employees' Union should be permitted to appear for the defence, that no order of dismissal should be made unless the worker concerned is informed in writing of the charge against him and given an opportunity to explain the circumstances alleged against him and that an order of suspension may take effect immediately.

As regards notice of termination of service, it was agreed on both sides in my presence that during the probationary period of three months no notice would be necessary to terminate the services of any probationer, but that after confirmation, one month's notice would be necessary for the termination of service.

As regards the question of promotion, it was agreed on both sides in my presence that the discretion to promote any particular employee rested entirely with the management. My award on issue No. 3 will be in accordance with the agreed compromise between both parties.

Issue No. 5.—Gratuity, annual bonus and Provident Fund.

As regards annual bonus, both parties agreed in my presence that two months' pay during Puja time should be the annual bonus for the year 1948 and that in future the annual bonus should be in accordance with the financial condition of the Company.

As regards Provident Fund, it was agreed on both sides in my presence that 6¼ per cent. of the basic pay as fixed by this Tribunal should be the employee's contribution to his Provident Fund and 6¼ per cent. of the same basic pay should be the employer's contribution. The Provident Fund, it was agreed on both sides, should be managed in accordance with the Government Provident Fund Rules. It was also agreed that there should be no gratuity.

My award on issue No. 5 is in accordance with the agreed compromise between the parties.

Issue No. 6.—Working hours.

It was agreed on both sides in my presence that the working hours should normally be from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. with half an hour's recess at an exact point of time to be decided by the employer and that the working hours on Saturdays shall be from 10 a.m. to 2-30 p.m. as at present.

My award on this issue is in accordance with the agreed compromise between the parties.

Issue No. 7.—Tiffin room to be furnished with chairs, benches, drinking water, etc.

This issue on the consent of both parties was not pressed at all.

Issue No. 8.—Imposition of fines.

It was agreed on both sides in my presence that there should be no monetary fines in any case. My award is in accordance with this agreed compromise.

Issue No. 9.—Leave, revision of Leave Rules.

It was agreed on both sides in my presence that there should be 10 days' casual leave for every employee every year with full pay, that there should be 15 days' privilege leave with full pay and 15 days' more with half pay. It was further agreed on both sides in my presence that the 15 days' privilege leave with full pay will accumulate for 2 years, that is to say, 30 days with full pay will accumulate. Finally, with regard to sickness and other causes of absence, it was agreed on both sides in my presence, that on account of sickness, quarantine, etc., leave without pay would be granted for any period which the employer Company considers reasonable.

Issue No. 10.—Relation Committee.

After some discussion this issue was not pressed by the Association, and both parties agreed to give it up.

There has been agreement on as many as 7 out of 10 issues. It is regrettable that the workmen and the employers could not come to a mutual agreement on the remaining three issues, the most vital of which is regarding the revision of pay and scales of pay and dearness allowance. I therefore, proceed to give my award on these three remaining issues one by one.

Issue No. 2.—Revision of pay and scales of pay and dearness allowance.

From the materials placed before me, I find that there are about 57 employees under the Company drawing pays ranging from Rs. 1,000 per month to Rs. 38 per month. On an analysis of the starting salary and the present salary of most of the employees, the conclusion is irresistible that the increment of pay and other allowances has been without any system or any recognised principle Thus Sri N. C. Dey, who was appointed in the year 1932 on a starting salary of Rs. 50, is at present getting the salary of Rs. 1,000, while Sudhi Giri, a non-matric, whose starting salary was Rs. 2 in 1944, is now getting only Rs. 38. Enquiry further revealed that the Company has no gradation of salaries, nor has it any classification of th different kinds of employees into different categories; and finally I am surprised to find tha although some individual workman has been drawing some special allowances, there is no such thing as a formal dearness allowance. My task is, therefore, somewhat onerous. I have to formulate different categories of workmen, fix their scales of pay and dearness allowance.

The Company employs Bearers, Jamadars, Durwans, Drivers, Typists, Stenographers, Clerks, Sectional Heads and five other officers of the superior rank, viz., Sjs. N. C. Dey, R. C. Dutt, P. K. Das, H. N. Ray and A. K. Das, each drawing a salary above Rs. 350. I have to fit in each of these employees in different categories and fix the scale of pay for each category. Now, the Company although giving some special allowances to some of its employees, has not given anything specifically by way of dearness allowance. It was argued on behalf of the workmen that the pay and emoluments which each individual employee is receiving at present should be construed as his basic pay and that dearness allowance should be calculated at a certain reasonable percentage of this basic pay. My objection to this is as follows: The present pay and emoluments drawn by an employee cannot be regarded purely as basic pay, altogether devoid of dearness allowance. From the materials placed before me, I can see that the present salaries of most of the employees have become twice, thrice or even four times of the starting salary, all in the course of the last 10/12 years. I cannot conceive of any scale of pay by which a man's basic salary can increase to fourteen or even twenty times the amount in the course of 10/12 years. It is, therefore, idle to deny that the employer Company must have sanctioned these increased salaries and emoluments in order to enable its workmen to tide over the present difficulties of rising prices, or in other words, in my view it is a reasonable proposition that the present salaries and emoluments drawn by each of the employees consist in part of the basic pay and in part the dearness allowance, though it is not specifically so called. The question that now arises is how to split up the present salary and emoluments so as to evolve out of them the basic pay and the dearness allowance. No cut-and-dried method exists and whatever may be said recommending any particular method, something against it can always possibly be said. But I think a workable solution will be to divide the present salary and emoluments drawn by any particular employee into four equal parts and regard three-fourths of the salary and emoluments as his basic pay and the remaining one-fourth as his dearness allowance. The dearness allowance is thus one-third of the basic pay. This method I am going to follow in fixing the basic salaries and dearness allowances of different categories of workmen.

After consulting both sides and after a careful consideration of the position of all the workmen, I lay down as many as 7 categories of workmen and also lay down the scales of pay of workmen under each of these categories:—

(1) Subordinate staff including Bearers, Jamadars and Durwans.—(a) Durwans and Jamadars and Mistries.—Scale of pay Rs. 30—1—42 plus one-third of the basic pay as dearness allowance.

(b) Bearers.—Scale of pay Rs. 30—½—36 plus one-third of the basic pay as dearness allowance.

(2) Drivers.—Scale of pay Rs. 60—1—75 plus one-third of the basic pay as dearness allowance.

(3) Typists.—Scale of pay Rs. 45—1½—75 plus one-third of the basic pay as dearness allowance.

(4) Stenographers.—Scale of pay Rs. 70—2—140 plus one-third of the basic pay as dearness allowance.

(5) Clerks, Clerical Assistants and Telephone Operators.—In this category, I propose to make three subdivisions as follows:—

(a) basic pay Rs. 45—1½—75 plus one-third of the basic pay as dearness allowance;

(b) basic pay Rs. 75—2—105 plus one-third of the basic pay as dearness allowance; and

(c) basic pay Rs. 105—5—150 plus one-third of the basic pay as dearness allowance.

(6) Sectional Heads.—Basic pay Rs. 150—10—200 plus one-third of the basic pay as dearness allowance.

This will cover the cases of all the workmen excepting those five superior officers mentioned above drawing from Rs. 350 upwards. These five officers must constitute a special grade, for which I do not think any basic pay or dearness allowance ought to be fixed. The matter is best left entirely to negotiation.

Now the question is how to fit in the existing workmen in these different categories and what should be their scales of pay. I would lay down as the first principle that in no case the prescribed total emoluments, i.e., basic pay and dearness allowance, should be lower than the actual present total emoluments of each particular workman.

The next important principle that I would lay down is that the basic pay a particular workman is construed to be drawing at present should be three-fourths of his present pay and emoluments and the remaining one-fourth should be regarded as the present dearness allowance drawn by him.

Each workman should find a place in one of the 7 categories as enumerated above according to his category. In calculating what basic pay and dearness allowance a particular workman should draw the moment the award comes into force, the following simple rule is laid down:—

If the basic pay, i.e., three-fourths of the total present pay and emolument is below the minimum in the scale of pay as fixed above, then he will get the minimum basic pay of the scale; but if his basic pay, calculated on the basis of three-fourths of his present pay and emolument, is equal to the minimum or above it, in the scale of pay as laid down above, then he will get one increment straight away and the corresponding dearness allowance. I proceed to make my meaning clear by examples:—

A, a Durwan who comes under category (1)(a) because he is a Durwan, draws pay and allowance at Rs. 36 per month. This amount should be construed to be composed of Rs. 27 as basic pay and Rs. 9 as dearness allowance (in the proportion of three-fourths and one-fourth). A look at the first category of workmen, viz., "Subordinate staff including Bearers, Jamadars and Durwans" will show that the salary of class 1(a) of workmen, viz., Durwans, Jamadars and Mistries, is Rs. 30—1—42 plus one-third of the basic pay as dearness allowance. The minimum basic pay is Rs. 30. A will, therefore, at once get Rs. 30 as basic pay plus Rs. 10 as dearness allowance.

B, a clerk who comes in category (5) because he is a clerk, is drawing Rs. 60 per month as total pay and emoluments. Three-fourths of this, i.e., Rs. 45, represents his basic pay and the balance of Rs. 15 as dearness allowance. He, therefore, comes under the 5th category "Clerks, Clerical Assistants, Telephone Operators", sub-category (a). The present pay that he will get according to my award will be Rs. 46-8, as his basic pay (the next increment) and one-third of that amount, i.e., Rs. 15-8, as his dearness allowance. His total pay including dearness allowance will be Rs. 62.

I hope these examples will make the matter clear and there will be no scope for any ambiguity.

Issue No. 4.—Whether the award will have a retrospective effect.

The dispute arose on 26th July 1947 when the Association held a special general meeting of all its members and submitted a memorandum of demands. If retrospective effect has got to be given, that means that the award will have to take effect from July 1947, and as is well known, the maximum period for which an award can remain in existence being one year, the award will have spent its force by 26th July 1948, that is to say, even before it was actually written and signed. This is absurd. I think the best course would be that the award should take effect, subject to the direction of the Government, from the date of the first Government notification, i.e., 21st May 1948, and shall remain in force for a period of one year or less, as the Government decides.

Issue No. 1.—Recognition of the Union.

It was represented to me on behalf of the employer Company that if the whole matter be amicably settled, the Company will have no objection to recognise the Union. But, unfortunately, although there has been agreement on 7 out of the 10 issues, yet there has been conflict with regard to 3 of the issues, the most fundamental being on the question of scales of pay. I would, however, strongly recommend to the employer Company to recognise the Union. When there has been so much give and take between the parties, it would be unbecoming of the employer Company not to recognise the Union. The question of final recognition will, of course, arise when the Labour Courts come into existence; but pending that I do not think there can be any harm on the part of the Company to recognise the Union and I think this graceful act will lead to better understanding and peace. My thanks are due both to the employer Company and the workmen for their able assistance in solving the dispute.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

In order to make the operation of the West Bengal Premises Requisition and Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1947, more effective it has become necessary to make the following provisions, namely:—

(1) to define the word "premises" so that the owner may not claim exemption from requisition of any premises on the plea that they are not intended for letting purposes;

(2) to obtain powers for the Provincial Government—

  (i) to take such action as may be necessary to prevent occupation of any vacant premises which are proposed to be requisitioned;

  (ii) where the premises are requisitioned without any furniture, to compel the owner thereof to remove the same within a specified period, failing which to make it liable to be removed, or sold in auction, if necessary, at the cost and risk of the owner;

  (iii) in cases where the Collector is opposed or impeded in taking possession of any requisitioned premises, to enforce surrender of such premises; and

  (iv) to evict any person inducted by Government on any requisitioned premises on the ground of wrongful use of such premises or default in the payment of rent and other charges in respect thereof, which shall be realisable as a public demand; and

(3) to validate all orders heretofore made under section 3 of the said Act by an officer of the Provincial Government.

The Bill has been framed with these objects in view.

PRESENT:

SRI MATISH CHANDRA BANERJI, Judge, Industrial Tribunal.

AWARD.

Messrs. Bankilal Gopinath, Ltd., is a hosiery firm situated at 203, Harrison Road, Calcutta. The Company also owns a bigger hosiery factory at Muzaffarpur in the province of Bihar, known as the Bihar Hosiery Factory. The factory in Calcutta is a small one and employs 13 or 14 persons. The workmen of the establishment are members of the Calcutta Hosiery Sramik Union. On 11th October 1947, the workmen submitted, through the Joint Secretary of their Union, a charter of demands to the Company through registered post, but the letter was refused by the addressee. A few days after a workman of the factory was dismissed and on the 26th of December 1947 all the workmen absented from the factory, claiming that they were enjoying leave without pay according to the permission of the employers. According to the employers, the workmen absented themselves without permission or notice on 26th December 1947. On the 27th of December 1947 the employers dismissed the entire body of workmen on the ground of their absence on the previous day and the matter was brought to the notice of the Labour Commissioner, West Bengal, and the employers took back to their service all the workmen except five, namely, (1) Sri Santiranjan Nath, (2) Sri Arjun Chandra Chandra, (3) Sri Haripada De, (4) Sri Biswanath Chakrabartty, and (5) Sri Nagendra Chandra Dhar. Attempt at conciliation over the matter failed and the disputes between the workmen and the Company were referred by the Government of West Bengal in the Commerce, Labour and Industries Department under sections 7 and 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act by order No. 1897Lab., dated 9th June 1948, to Sri S. C. Dutta Gupta, Additional District Judge, for adjudication.

Notices were issued on the parties and they filed written statements and issues were framed on these statements. In partial modification of the Government order No. 1897Lab., dated 9th June 1948, the disputes were referred to me by order No. 2851Lab., dated 17th August 1948, and the case was heard by me on 8th September 1948.

Sri P. C. Chunder, Solicitor of Messrs. G. C. Chunder and Co., along with the President of the Calcutta Hosiery Sramik Union and some of the workmen appeared for the Union. Sri S. C. Sen, Advocate, assisted by Sri M. L. Jhunjhunwala, Solicitor of Messrs. Khaitan and Co., and Sri K. N. Kapoor, Director of the Company, appeared for the Company.

Issues framed are as follows:—

(1) Jurisdiction of the Tribunal to grant the reliefs claimed or any of them.

(2) Reinstatement of Sri Santiranjan Nath, Sri Arjun Chandra Chandra, Sri Haripada De, Sri Biswanath Chakrabartty and Sri Nagendra Chandra Dhar.

(3) Minimum salary of the workers.

(4) Dearness allowance.

(5) Bonus.

(6) Leave.

(7) Recognition of the Union.

DECISION.

Issue No. 1.—Jurisdiction of the Tribunal to grant the reliefs claimed or any of them.

The Company state in their written statement that they are the owners of Bihar Hosiery Factory and that the said factory is situated at Muzaffarpur in the province of Bihar and as such the order of reference to this Tribunal was bad in law and the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon any dispute alleged by the Union. There can be no doubt that this Tribunal has jurisdiction to entertain the disputes between the employers and their workmen of the Hosiery Factory situated in Calcutta and that the Tribunal has no jurisdiction in respect of any dispute between the workmen and the employers of the factory in Bihar. The Union in this present reference does not represent any workman of the Bihar factory, and the alleged disputes are entirely between the workmen in the Calcutta factory and the employers. The Tribunal has ample jurisdiction to adjudicate on the dispute between the workmen of the factory in Calcutta and the employers, and I award accordingly.

Issue No. 2.—Reinstatement of Sri Santiranjan Nath, Sri Arjun Chandra Chandra, Sri Haripada De, Sri Biswanath Chakrabartty and Sri Nagendra Chandra Dhar.

The Union stated in the written statement that on 24th December 1947 the workers of the factory demanded a holiday on 25th December 1947 but the employers told them that as one of the proprietors was not in town, no holiday could be sanctioned until the next day, and, further, that on 25th December 1947, the employers permitted the workers leave without pay on 26th December 1947. The workers claimed that it was in accordance with this permission that they were absent on 26th December 1947. The Company's case is that after the dismissal of one of the workmen, namely, Manindra Nath Dutta, for unsatisfactory outturn of work, the workmen indulged in indisciplinary behaviour and on 25th December 1947 they left the factory without permission after working only for one hour; and that they did not attend the factory at all on 26th December 1947. In short, the Company's statement is that the workmen were absent without permission or leave for the whole of 25th December 1947 and 26th December 1947 except for one hour on 25th December 1947. It appears that after this absence, which is claimed by the Company to be unauthorised and contrary to the rudimentary discipline of the factory, the Company discharged all the workmen. It further appears that at the intercession of the Labour Commissioner, the Company took back to their service all the workmen except five whose reinstatement is now demanded by the Union.

At the hearing the parties agreed before me that the Union would not press for reinstatement of the five employees, namely, Santiranjan, Arjun, Haripada, Biswanath and Nagendra Chandra, on condition that each of them was paid one month's wages as compensation for their discharge. The Company agreed to pay this compensation. It appears from the statement of both the parties that Santiranjan used to get Rs. 50, Arjun Rs. 60, Haripada Rs. 55, Biswanath Rs. 70 and Nagendra Rs. 65 per month as wages. The Company did not pay any separate dearness allowance. These workmen worked in the Company till 25th December 1947. They are, therefore, entitled to their wages for work done till that date less any advance, if any, taken by any one of them. In case each of them gets a compensation to the extent of one month's wages as stated above, Santiranjan will get a compensation of Rs. 50, Arjun a compensation of Rs. 60, Biswanath a compensation of Rs. 70, Haripada a compensation of Rs. 55 and Nagendra a compensation of Rs. 65 over and above the arrear wages for work done up to 25th December 1947 that may be due to them. It appears that out of these five workmen only Santiranjan was in service of the Company for about two years and the other four were in service for less than three months. In the circumstances, the compensation of one month's wages on their discharge as agreed to by the Company appears to me to be quite substantial and I accept the suggestion of the parties on the point. It is, therefore, awarded that these five workmen shall get their arrear wages for work up to 25th December 1947 less any advance, if any, taken by them and also one month's wages by way of compensation for discharge as stated above. The prayer for reinstatement is rejected.

Issue No. 3.—Minimum salary of the workers, Issue No. 4.—Dearness allowance, and Issue No. 5.—Bonus.

These three issues were not pressed at the time of the hearing. The Union only pressed for prescribing the period of apprenticeship of the workmen in this factory. It appears that there was no claim for increase of the salary of the workers in the charter of demands filed by the Union on 11th October 1947. The Union is not, therefore, entitled to claim an increase of salary of the workers before the Tribunal, as they did in their written statement. The Union claimed an increase of the minimum salary to Rs. 80 in the written statement. It appears that there are twelve workers in the factory, of whom four are monthly paid, four are paid on piece rates, three are apprentice workmen and one is a cooly. The minimum salary of the monthly paid workmen is now Rs. 55 per month. The apprentice workmen get Rs. 35 or Rs. 40 per month. The Union states in the written statement that the minimum salary is on an average Rs. 55 per month. No separate dearness allowance is paid by the Company and the salary is a consolidated sum of basic wages and dearness allowance taken together. The charter of demands, dated 11th October 1947, only wanted an extra dearness allowance at 25 per cent. of the pay. It appears that the Company granted an increase of 12½ per cent. on the wages in February 1948. As I have mentioned above, these claims were not pressed at the time of the hearing and I do not also consider that the wages paid by the Company were unsatisfactory, or needed a further revision.

The Company informed me that the usual period of apprenticeship in their factory is one year. It appears that the minimum salary offered to an apprentice on a satisfactory completion of the period of probation and on employment in the factory after the period of probation is Rs. 50 per month. I direct that this practice shall be followed in future.

The claim of bonus was not also pressed at the hearing and it is not allowed.

Issue No. 6.—Leave.

The Union wanted ten days' privilege leave with full pay; fifteen days' medical leave with full pay along with another fifteen days' medical leave on half pay and three months' leave without pay. It appears that the Company grants thirteen and a half days' festival leave in a calendar year. I heard the parties on the question of leave and award as follows. In supersession of this leave it is awarded that a workman shall get ten days' privilege leave with full pay on completion of one year's service which will be cumulative for two years. He shall also get six days' festival holidays on full pay to be fixed by the authorities of the Company, and ten days' sick leave on half pay in a calendar year. If any workman has already enjoyed any leave according to the old rules during this year, it shall be set off against the new scale of leave and holidays as allowed under this award.

Issue No. 7.—Recognition of the Union.

The Union pressed for its recognition by the Company. This question, however, is not an industrial dispute and the Company is to follow the procedure prescribed in sections 28C and 28E of the Indian Trade Unions Act, 1928. The Union is to apply to the employer for recognition and the Company assured me that they would consider the question of recognition of the Union when they received an application by the Union in that behalf. I would, therefore, advise the Union to formally apply to the Company for its recognition under the Indian Trade Unions Act. This Tribunal finds itself incompetent to grant the relief under this issue, which is therefore rejected.

Conclusion.

Although some of the workmen were discharged by the Company, the Company and the Union showed extreme reasonableness during the hearing of this dispute. I hope there would be no further trouble between the workmen and the employers in this factory.

In the matter of an industrial dispute between Messrs. Howrah Engineering Company and its workmen.

PRESENT: SRI S. K. HALDER, I.C.S.

For the Company—Sri S. C. Sen, Advocate, and Sri Jagannath Prosad Porel, Pleader.

For the Union—Sri Sudhir Kumar Bose, Advocate, instructed by Sri D. L. Sen Gupta, Pleader.

AWARD.

By Government of West Bengal order No. 2200-Lab., dated 2nd July 1948, the industrial dispute between Messrs. Howrah Engineering Company and their workmen has been referred to this Tribunal for adjudication. The workers of the Howrah Engineering Company placed their demand in writing on 29th October 1947 and 7th November 1947 claiming certain wages, dearness allowance, casual and other leave, Provident Fund and certain other facilities. The management took time to meet the demands, but eventually the facts were intimated to the Labour Commissioner and other authorities. On 2nd December 1947 certain terms and conditions were offered by the management to the workmen and, according to the management, the workers accepted the terms in toto and some of their representatives signed at the back of the terms and conditions in token of the fact that they had agreed to them. But the version of the workmen is that these terms and conditions were merely offered, but they were never accepted by the workmen and that the signatures of some of the workmen were obtained on a blank piece of paper which has subsequently been utilised by the management as an agreement. But it is significant to note that although there were constant disturbances occasionally followed by stay-in strikes from the period 21st August 1947 up to 2nd December 1947, the alleged date of the agreement, there followed a temporary period of peace from 2nd December 1947 to 24th December 1947 after which trouble started again. According to the management, some of the workmen induced others to stop work and indulged in intimidation and abuse of the supervisory staff, so that the management had to report all these matters to the local police and the District Magistrate.

On 8th January 1948 another stay-in strike was organised and this matter was also reported to the Labour Commissioner, the District Magistrate and the police. The Company, upon an enquiry, drew up proceedings against six of the workmen, who were alleged to be ring leaders. They were (1) Protap Kundu, (2) Gopal Das, (3) Sankar Dey, (4) Probodh Ghosh, (5) Sailendra Bhowmik alias Bhuiya and (6) Sukumar Kundu.

Protap Kundu showed cause on behalf of himself as well as five others on 14th January 1948. The cause shown was not considered satisfactory and on 16th January 1948 the management discharged all the six persons. According to the management those six persons in concert with some of their friends and sympathisers continued to create disturbances and on 2nd February 1948 another stay-in strike was started and the police was informed. With the help of the police the situation was somehow brought under control and as on the following day no workmen returned to work, the management closed the factory after reporting the matter to the Labour Commissioner and other authorities. The factory was locked up up to 3rd March 1948 as some of the workers persisted in threatening to go on strike. According to the workmen, the dismissal of the six persons named above was a retaliatory measure on the part of the management because those six persons had incurred the particular displeasure of the management. The case of the workmen further is that though the management promised on 2nd December 1947 certain terms and conditions, yet the management did not implement some of these terms and conditions, as a result of which the agitation of the workmen continued. On 10th February 1948 the Labour Commissioner sent a letter to the Manager, Howrah Engineering Company, pointing out the violation of section 33 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, in dismissing six workers and in announcing a lock-out, when the dispute was pending before him. The Labour Commissioner also requested to reinstate the dismissed workers. Even after the factory re-opened, the relationship between the management and the workers was far from satisfactory. There were police cases on either side and some of the cases are still pending. Several prominent men including Sri Bepin Behari Ganguly, M.L.A., President, Bengal Provincial National Trade Union Congress and Sri Alamohon Das, the well-known industrialist, tried to intervene and bring about an amicable settlement, but in vain. Thereafter the matter was referred to the Government, as has already been stated above, and the Government by order No. 2200Lab., dated 2nd July 1948, has sent the industrial dispute to this Tribunal.

The following issues, which were framed in this case, will show the nature of the dispute:—

Issues.

1. In view of the agreement between the management and the workmen, dated 2nd December 1947, is the Union competent to press the general demands before this Tribunal?

2. Has the Tribunal jurisdiction to direct reinstatement of any discharged or dismissed worker? If so, under what conditions?

3. Did the discharge or dismissal of any of the six workers (1) Protap Kundu, (2) Gopal Das, (3) Sankar Dey, (4) Probodh Ghosh, (5) Sukumar Kundu, (6) Sailen Bhuiya, amount to unfair labour practice?

4. Are any of the aforesaid discharged or dismissed workers entitled to reinstatement, or to any ther relief?

General Demands.

5. Minimum basic pay and scales of pay for workers of different categories.

6. Dearness allowance for such workers.

7. Leave and holidays.

8. Double pay for work on a Sunday or a holiday.

9. Contributory Provident Fund system.

10. Discharge and retrenchment and appointment of retrenched workers.

11. First-aid facilities.

12. Recognition of Loha Karkhana Mazdur Congress and provision of accommodation for the Union office in the factory premises.

Both parties produced some witnesses, who were xamined and cross-examined at length. The principal witnesses on behalf of the management were the Sub-Inspector Niranjan Kumar Santra, Officer-in-charge, Bantra police-station, Monmatha Nath Khan, a clerk under the Howrah Engineerng Company, and Gopal Chandra Das, the acting Manager of the Company. The principal witnesses xamined on behalf of the workmen were Sri Mohendra Nath Dey, Assistant Labour Commisioner, Howrah, Sailen Bhowmik alias Bhuiya, ne of the discharged workmen, and others. Both parties also referred me to a large number of documents throwing light upon the case. Arguments were heard at length and I explained to both parties the desirability of amicably settling he dispute between themselves, if possible. At irst all chances of amicable settlement appeared o be extremely remote, but as argument proceeded t appeared to me that both parties were assuming reasonable attitude. Eventually yesterday the epresentatives of both parties sat with me round a table and came to an agreement on almost all the ssues leaving only a few unimportant issues for my decision.

I take those issues first which have been settled amicably between the parties in my presence.

Issue No. 1.—In view of the agreement between the management and the workmen, dated 2nd December 1947, is the Union competent to press the general demands before the Tribunal?

This issue has been settled amicably between the parties as follows:—

The agreement, dated 2nd December 1947, which s annexed herewith, is wholly accepted by both parties. The classification of all the workmen in he different grades as mentioned in clause 2 of the agreement is left to the discretion of the management. Clause 6 will not have retrospective effect. Division of workmen in different grades will be in accordance with the list herewith annexed and submitted by the management. The terms of the agreement shall remain valid notwithstanding clause 10 for the period during which the award remains valid.

My award is accordingly made in terms of the agreed compromise between the parties.

Issue No. 2.—Has the Tribunal jurisdiction to direct reinstatement of any discharged or dismissed worker? If so, under what conditions?

Both parties have agreed that the Tribunal has got jurisdiction. But the question of jurisdiction can never be the matter of an agreement between the parties litigating before the Tribunal. It is for the Tribunal to decide whether, upon a consideration of all the attending circumstances, the Tribunal can hold that it has jurisdiction. The question of reinstatement has been the subject matter of decision by different Tribunals of different Provinces and unfortunately there is a conflict of judicial decisions on this point. Some Tribunals have held, for example, that the utmost legal remedy of a dismissed worker in a court of law is a suit for damages and that no court of law can order reinstatement. But it has been held by certain other Tribunals that the scope of an Industrial Tribunal being much wider than that of an ordinary civil court, the question of reinstatement can legally be gone into and is perfectly within the jurisdiction of such a Tribunal. I understand that the same question is awaiting decision before our High Court. I do not anticipate what the decision is going to be. In my view when it is the intention of the statute that an Industrial Tribunal should settle a dispute between the management and the workmen, it is necessary and desirable that all questions relating to the dispute should come within the jurisdiction of the Industrial Tribunal. Many industrial disputes and undoubtedly the present dispute relates to the principal question of reinstatement. Both parties made it clear to me that other issues are more or less minor in nature. Hence there will be no solution of dispute if the main question of reinstatement is relegated to the background for want of jurisdiction. I hold that the Industrial Tribunal has got jurisdiction to deal with the question of reinstatement. As both parties agreed that the Tribunal has got jurisdiction and this being my own view also, I accept the agreed compromise on issue No. 2, which accordingly will be a part of my award.

Issue No. 3.—Did the discharge or dismissal of any of the six workers (1) Protap Kundu, (2) Gopal Das, (3) Sanker Dey, (4) Probodh Ghosh, (5) Sukumar Kundu, (6) Sailen Bhuiya, amount to unfair labour practice? And Issue No. 4.—Are any of the aforesaid discharged or dismissed workers entitled to reinstatement, or to any other relief?

Both parties have agreed before me to the reinstatement of (1) Gopal Das, (2) Sanker Dey, (3) Probodh Ghosh, (4) Sailen Bhuiya.

Both parties have agreed before me that Protap and Sukumar Kundu are not to be reinstated and in view of the pecuniary condition of Sukumar Kundu, the Company agreed to pay him a lump sum of Rs. 100. I am happy that this matter has been amicably settled between the parties in so satisfactory a manner. The management has shown generosity in taking back four out of the six dismissed workmen and in granting a lump sum of Rs. 100 to the dismissed workman Sukumar Kundu who has not been reinstated. I have no hesitation in accepting these terms of compromise as reasonable. My award will be accordingly in terms of the compromise on Issue Nos. 3 and 4.

The question as to the exact date from which the reinstatement will take effect has been left to me for decision by both parties. This question will be taken up later in this award.

GENERAL DEMANDS.

Issue No. 5.—Minimum basic pay and scales of pay for workers of different categories; Issue No. 6.—Dearness allowance for such workers; Issue No. 7.—Leave and holidays; Issue No. 8.—Double pay for work on a Sunday or a holiday; Issue No. 10.—Discharge and retrenchment and appointment of retrenched workers; and Issue No. 11.—First-aid facilities.

Both parties have agreed before me that these issues are all covered by the agreement, dated 2nd December 1947, which is filed along with the terms of the settlement. These issues relate to the minimum basic pay, scales of pay, dearness allowance, leave and holidays, double pay for work on Sundays or holidays, discharge, retrenchment, etc., and first-aid facilities. A look at the terms of the agreement, dated 2nd December 1947, will convince anyone that all these questions are covered thereby. When parties have accepted the terms of this agreement, I have no hesitation in making my award accordingly. The agreement, dated 2nd December 1947, will form a part of my award.

Apart from the above issues, the Company agreed as a gesture of good-will to donate the sum of Rs. 400 to be distributed equally among all the workmen, and in response to this gesture the workers assured the Company in my presence that they would behave properly, maintain discipline, be regular in their attendance and help to speed up production. I am very happy to say that all this is as it should be and I include this agreed compromise between the parties in my award. I do hope that from now onwards there will be an era of peaceful progress, enhanced production and mutual good-will on both sides.

The workers agreed before me that at the present moment all their demands are covered by the above compromise, which has been made a part of my award and that there is no other outstanding demand at the present moment.

Reference has already been made to some criminal cases pending on both sides, and the parties in their agreement before me stated that they would take every step in their power to withdraw and compromise all the criminal cases pending against each other. I fully sympathise with this spirit of mutual good-will, but for obvious reasons I cannot make this a part of my award.

Thus most of the issues have been settled by both parties amicably. The parties have failed to come to terms on four points, viz.—

(1) Contributory Provident Fund system, which is issue No. 9.

(2) The date from which the reinstatement of the four workmen, Gopal Das, Sanker Dey, Probodh Ghosh and Sailen Bhuiya will take effect.

(3) Whether the management should pay the workmen their full pay for the lock-out period from 3rd February 1948 to 3rd March 1948.

(4) Recognition of Loha Karkhana Mazdur Congress and provision of accommodation for the Union office in the factory premises.

The first and last of these issues have already been made issues, but the remaining two points, though not formally made issues, have cropped up during the discussion of these issues and I think all the four points will have to be adjudicated by me. I take up these points one by one.

Issue No. 9.—Contributory Provident Fund system.

It is a well-recognised principle that this concession regarding Provident Fund ought to be allowed by every employer of an industrial concern. The arguments advanced on behalf of the management do not appear to me to be at all convincing. I, therefore, direct that each workman without distinction should pay 6¼ per cent. of his basic monthly pay every month towards his Provident Fund, that the Company should pay an equal amount, i.e., 6¼ per cent. of the basic monthly pay of that workman towards his Provident Fund and that the fund should be maintained in accordanc with the Provident Fund Rules. I make th award accordingly.

The date from which the reinstatement of Gopa Das, Sanker Dey, Probodh Ghosh and Sailer Bhuiya will come into effect.

It was argued on behalf of the workmen tha the dismissal of these persons amounted to unfai labour practice and that, therefore, they should b reinstated from the date ot their dismissal, viz. 16th January 1948. I have gone through th evidence in detail and I am not satisfied from th evidence that the dismissal of these workme altogether amounted to unfair labour practice There were faults on both sides. The suspensio of work on 25th January 1947, on which date thes workmen took prominent part, was in connectio with the reinstatement of one Madan Uria, question wholly unconnected with the presen labour dispute. On 27th December 1947 some o these workmen took up what appears to me to b a violent attitude. They attempted to assault th management and to abuse it. In view of the fac that major portion of the dispute had been amicabl settled in an atmosphere ot peace and good-will I do not wish to recapitulate past incidents whic might injuriously affect the relationship betwee the parties; but it will suffice to say that th workmen themselves conceded that the dismissa of the six workmen was not altogether unjustifie because they agreed that two of their workme should not be reinstated. In these circumstance I should consider it fair and reasonable that th reinstatement should take effect from the date o the compromise before me, i.e., from 19th Augus 1948. It is to be remembered in this connectio that the Company pays its workmen daily wages Accordingly my award is that these four workmen viz., (1) Gopal Das, (2) Sanker Dey, (3) Probod Ghosh, and (4) Sailen Bhuiya, should b reinstated with effect from 19th August 1948.

Whether the workmen should get their pay for th lock-out period from 3rd February 1948 to 3r March 1948.

On this point the parties failed to agree. I has been argued on behalf of the management tha on account of the constant stay-in-strikes and o account of the attitude taken up by some of th workmen, the Company was forced to lock up it gates as it apprehended that there would be breac of the peace if the workers were allowed inside th premises. It has been argued on behalf ot th workmen that the Company had no justificatio for the lock-out and that the lock-out was purel a retaliatory measure.

From the deposition of Gopal Chandra Das, th present Manager of the Company, I find that afte a peaceful period of about 22 days there wa another strike on 25th December 1947 over th question of reinstatement ot Madan Uria. I have already stated that the reinstatement of Mada Sardar was not in the charter of demands presented by the workmen. To placate the workers, the management reinstated Madan Uria, but the workmen again struck work on 27th December 1947 on the ground that they demanded a holiday for Xmas. A holiday was granted and the strike ended. Then again another strike was organised on 3rd January 1948 for 2/3 hours in protest of re-numbering of the workmen. There were some misapprehensions, totally unfounded, on the re-numbering of workers. But the workers, instead of approaching the management peacefully, thought it proper to get redress of their supposed grievance by striking work.. These three incidents referred to above would show that the workmen had lost all restraint and sense of discipline and showed an overzealousness in going on strike at the slightest pretext. I must say that I cannot regard this attitude of theirs with sympathy. On 8th January 1948 again there was a stay-in-strike for the whole day and some of the workmen assumed threatening attitude towards the management. The Company was forced to suspend payment for that day because some of the clerks and the Cashier could not come into the office. The matter was reported to the Labour Commissioner, the District Magistrate and the Officer-in-charge, Bantra police-station. Trouble went on from day to day up to 12th January 1948 when the management called upon six of the workmen named above to show cause why they should not be dismissed. After cause was shown and considered, those six workmen were dismissed on 16th January 1948. After the dismissal up to 2nd February 1948 the work continued without much hitch, but on 2nd February 1948 again there was a stay-in-strike on the ground of reinstatement of the six discharged workers. The attitude of the workmen was very turbulent on this occasion and the management after informing the police had to order a lock-out from 3rd February 1948. Witness Sailen Bhuiya, examined on behalf of the workmen, practically corroborated all these details. He stated in his cross-examination, "there was a strike on 25th December 1947 for about 2 hours over Madan Uria. There was trouble over re-numbering of tickets. There was suspension of work on 3rd January 1948 for about 1 or 2 hours. On 8th January there was suspension of work for 2 hours as the management stopped the motor. As we had stopped work until the management gave an explanation, the management stopped the motor during that period .... During this period the police came very frequently. ....It is not a fact that we six persons excited the workmen to create further trouble after 2nd December 1947.........I am an accused in a case, which was instituted after my dismissal, on a charge of rioting".

So it is quite clear that on account of the frequent disturbances in the Company's premises and on account of frequent strikes, the Company was forced to lock-out as it apprehended trouble. After the dismissal of these six workmen, the other workmen clamoured for their reinstatement and this created bad blood. This was the principal cause of the strike which took place after 16th January 1948. From a consideration of all the facts and circumstances, I hold that the lock-out was justified and I am not inclined to order payment of wages during the period of lock-out.

It was argued before me on behalf of the workmen that now that the matter has been amicably settled between the parties, the poor workmen may be allowed their wages for the period of the lock-out. While viewing the case of the workmen with every reasonable sympathy I must, at the same time, make it clear that no one should be allowed to make a profit by his own bad conduct. I accordingly hold that the claim for wages during the period of the lock-out should be disallowed.

Issue No. 12.—Recognition of Loha Karkhana Mazdur Congress and provision of accommodation for the Union office in the factory premises.

I must say at the outset that no argument was made on behalf of the workmen regarding the provision of accommodation of the Union office at the factory premises, and I take it that this point was abandoned by the workmen. But over the question of recognition of the Loha Karkhana Mazdur Congress, the parties could not come to an agreement. It was argued on behalf of the management that the Loha Karkhana Mazdur Congress came into existence after the present dispute remained pending for some time. It was further argued that all the earlier letters that had been received by the management in connection with the present dispute were letters issued by the "Iron Factory Workers' Union" which disappeared during the pendency of the dispute, while the present Loha Karkhana Mazdur Congress came into existence subsequently. It was pointed out to me on behalf of the management that the first letter, dated 21st August 1947, received by the management in connection with the present dispute was a letter bearing the signature of Sri Shibnath Banerjee, M.L.A., as President of the Iron Factory Workers' Union. The second letter containing the charter of demands is dated 29th October 1947 bearing the signature of Sri Arun Chandra Das as Secretary of Iron Factory Workers' Union, and in this letter the last demand is as follows:—

> "Recognition of Iron Factory Workers' Union."

It is therefore argued on behalf of the management that the present demand of the workmen as regards recognition is inconsistent with their first demand.

It was explained to me on behalf of the workmen that the case of the workmen was taken up by the Howrah Zilla Loha Karkhana Mazdur Congress which had been formed by Congress men under the guidance of Bengal Provincial National Trade Union Congress. Of course, the argument advanced on behalf of the management is quite correct inasmuch as in the charter of demands, dated 29th October 1947, the workmen demanded recognition of one Union and now they are demanding recognition of a different Union. This is technically correct. But while refusing formally to recognise the Howrah Zilla Loha Karkhana Mazdur Congress, the management has tacitly recognised the same Union because the terms of settlement annexed hereto would show that some of the members of the compromising party on behalf of the workmen signed as representatives of the Howrah Zilla Loha Karkhana Mazdur Congress. I think the management is now fighting purely on a formal and unimportant matter. The question of recognition, as the term itself implies, is rather voluntary and I do not think it can be enforced on anybody. I can at most recommend and I do emphatically recommend t the management that when they, by their act, hav given practical recognition to the Howrah Zill Loha Karkhana Mazdur Congress, they shoul now formally do so. It is understood that th Labour Courts are going to function very shortl and the question of recognition must at all event be left to the decision of the Labour Courts But at the same time I do recommend that th management should recognise the Howrah Zill Loha Karkhana Mazdur Congress.

Accordingly the question of recognition is lef open to be decided by the Labour Court, but m recommendation remains.

The terms of settlement enclosed herewith with certain reservations as stated above, the list submitted by the management showing the division of workmen in different grades and the agreement, dated 2nd December 1947, enclosed herewith shall form part of my award.

In conclusion, I wish to place on record my appreciation of the able and sincere co-operation and courtesy which I have uniformly received from the learned Advocates on both sides, particularly Sri Jagannath Prosad Porel and Sri Sudhir Kumar Bose. I congratulate both parties on their being able to come to an amicable agreement on most of the important points in this case and I reiterate the hope that henceforth there will be peace and good-will on both sides and that production will continue to increase.

S. K. HALDER,
Tribunal.

The 28th August 1948.

Terms of Settlement.

Issue No. 1.—Agreement, dated 2nd December 1947, is wholly accepted by both parties. The classification of all the workmen in the different grades as mentioned in clause 2 of the agreement is left to the discretion of the management. Clause 6 will have no retrospective effect. Division of workmen in different grades will be in accordance with the list herewith annexed and submitted by the management. The terms of the agreement shall remain valid, notwithstanding clause 10 for the period during which the award remains valid.

Issue No. 2.—Both parties agree that the Tribunal has jurisdiction.

Issue No. 3.—Both parties have agreed to reinstatement of (1) Gopal Das, (2) Shankor De, (3) Probodh Ghosh and (4) Sailen Bhuiya. Pratap Kundu and Sukumar Kundu are not reinstated.

Issue No. 4.—In view of the pecuniary condition of Sukumar Kundu the Company agrees to pay him a lump sum of Rs. 100.

General Demands.

Issue Nos. 5 to 8 and Issues Nos. 10 and 11.—These issues are all covered by the agreement, dated 2nd December 1947 (vide Issue No. 1).

Issue No. 9.—The Company objects to the raising of this issue as it is outside the agreement, dated 2nd December 1947. And the workers submitted that it is in their demand from as early as 29th October 1947. So both parties leave this issue to the decision of the Tribunal.

Issue No. 12.—The parties regret that they cannot come to an agreement of this issue and so this issue is left to the decision of the Tribunal.

Apart from the above issue, the Company agrees as a gesture of peace and good-will to denote the sum of Rs. 400 to be distributed equally among all the workmen.

In response to this gesture the workers assure the Company that they will behave properly, maintain discipline, be regular in their attendance and help to speed up production.

The workers press that the Company should pay them their full pay for the lock-out period from 3rd February 1948 to 3rd March 1948. The Company objects on the ground that this question is not in issue and that the lock-out was necessitated by the misconduct and illegal stay-in-strike of the workers. Whether there should be an issue at this stage is left to the Tribunal.

The workers agree that at the present moment there is no other demand. Both parties agree that they will take every step in their power to withdraw and compromise all the criminal cases pending against each other.

AWARD.

1. These disputes in the Jute Textile Industry in West Bengal between the employers of 89 specified jute mills as per list in Appendix I and their workmen as represented by certain specified Trade Unions as mentioned in paragraph 1(12) of this Award were referred to us for adjudication, under sections 7 and 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 (Act XIV of 1947), by the Government of West Bengal in the Department of Commerce, Labour and Industries, by order No. 343Lab., dated the 15th August 1947. This order was amended by way of clarification by order No. 418Lab., dated the 9th September 1947, order No. 601Lab., dated the 4th October 1947, and order No. 687Lab., dated the 17th October 1947. The reference covers the entire Jute Textile Industry in West Bengal, and the parties to these disputes are the employers of all the 89 jute mills on one side and the workmen of these mills numbering 275,000 more or less on the other.

1(1). The Jute Textile Industry in respect of its size and position in the National Economy of the Union of India is next only to the Cotton Textile Industry. It is the premier industry in West Bengal. The Jute Textile Industry is located mainly in West Bengal over a stretch of about 60 miles on either side of the river Hooghly, from Bansberia to Uluberia on the west bank and from Halisahar to Birlapur on the east bank. There are some units in the industry in the Province of Bihar, the United Provinces, and Madras Presidency and in the Eastern States Agency. Out of 112 jute mills all over the Union of India, 101 (inclusive of 1 in French Chandernagore) are situated in West Bengal. In 1944 not more than 7·6 per cent. of the total number of workers employed in the industry were outside West Bengal, and there is no reason to consider that there has since been any appreciable change of this proportion of employees in West Bengal and outside. The development of the industry in West Bengal was due initially to European enterprise, and was mainly conceived to meet the requirements of overseas markets.

1(2). It will be interesting to note that there was a flourishing jute handloom industry in Bengal till about the middle of the last century, and it accounted for the entire volume of the exports of jute fabric from India. It is remarkable that in 1850-51, raw jute and jute goods produced by the handloom industry were exported to Europe, North America, Malaya, Ceylon, Arabia and other places to the extent of 793,299 maunds of raw jute and 9,035,713 pieces of gunnies and gunny cloth. (Report of the Bengal Jute Enquiry Committee, 1934, Volume I, page 74.)

1(3). This prosperity, however, was eclipsed by the growth of mechanical manufacture of jute products in Dundee and in the Calcutta industrial area. The decadence of the indigenous industry actually started in 1835, when the first jute mill was established in Dundee and jute goods manufactured by mechanical processes began to compete with the handloom products of Bengal threatening the indigenous industry to the limit of ultimate extinction; it was but hastened by the establishment of local power-driven industry. The first power-driven spinning mill was established at Serampore in 1855, but the weaving was done by hand until 1859, when power-driven looms were installed. The handloom industry gradually declined, but it held some ground till 1884, and ceased to exist nearabout 1885. It is reported that even in 1880 the fine products of the handloom industry accounted for Rs.2·6 lakhs out of the total value of Rs.113 lakhs exported during the year. (Report of the Bengal Jute Enquiry Committee, 1934, Volume I, page 75.)

1(4). The decline of the handloom industry synchronised with the expansion of the power loom industry. During the period 1860 to 1873, only five companies were operating with a total loomage of 1,250. In 1885 there were eleven companies with 6,700 looms. The industry grew steadily from year to year and from period to period, and at present in West Bengal there are 101 jute mills (including 1 in French Chandernagore) with 65,227 looms, and these account for 57 per cent. of the world's total loomage. (Report of the Bengal Industrial Survey Committee, page 60.) Although manufacturing operations were taken up in Bengal much later than in many other countries, by 1910 the power loom production in India outstripped in productive capacity all other centres including Dundee.

1(5). The industry was organised by the manufacturers even at the early stages of its development. The Indian Jute Manufacturers' Association was formed in July 1884 for the improvement of the trade and internal discipline, and for collective action to promote and protect the interests of the members. This Association was renamed Indian Jute Mills' Association in 1902. In 1939 the Association expanded its organising responsibility by a voluntary agreement among its members in Bengal and outside relating to working hours for the adjustment of output to demand. According to the Review of Trade, the industry was placed on a stable foundation by this agreement. Out of 112 jute mills in the Union of India, 103 are members of the Association, and of these 97 are in West Bengal. Out of the total loomage in the Union of India, 95 per cent. is under the control of the Indian Jute Mills' Association. Out of 101 jute mills (including 1 in French Chandernagore) in West Bengal, 11 were under requisition by the Government of India on the date of this reference. The rest comprises the 89 mills located in West Bengal, involved in this reference, a list of which appears in Appendix I. It may be noted that the mills in the district of 24-Parganas as mentioned in the list are on the east bank of the river Hooghly, and those in the districts of Howrah and Hooghly are on the west bank.

1(6). There are groups of mills under the management of the same Managing Agents. Messrs. Bird and Co. manage 7 mills with a total loomage of 5,890, Messrs. Thomas Duff and Co. have under their management 4 mills with 6,334 looms, Messrs. Jardine Henderson, Ltd., control 4 mills with a loomage of 6,440, and Messrs. Andrew Yule & Co., Ltd., manage 9 mills with a total of 6,396 looms. These are the managing agents commanding the greatest number of looms in the industry. The Hukum Chand Jute Mill at Halisahar in 24-Parganas (Managing Agents: Ram Dutt Ram Kissen Dass) commands the largest number of looms in a single mill, the number being 2,272 which is 3·47 per cent. of the total loomage in the entire industry in the Union of India.

1(7). Though there has been a remarkable expansion of the Jute Textile Industry in Bengal, ever since its inception lack of variety in the items of manufactured goods has all along been the distinctive character of the industry. No mentionable attempt appears to have been made to manufacture anything beyond hessian and sacking cloth. In confining their operations to only a few manufacturing processes, the jute mills have not only failed to expand the scope of the trade, but they have also been suffering from the evils of overproduction of the particular varieties manufactured by them. The restriction of the manufacturing processes to the production of practically two varieties of goods appears to have compelled the management to resort frequently to shorter hours and sealing of looms and this has been the consistent practice of the jute mills for the last 40 years or so. It may be mentioned that the jute fabric is also used in manufacturing shirtings, curtains, carpets and rugs, particularly in European countries and America. In those countries it is also blended with wool and the finer qualities are used for mixing with silk and for manufacturing imitation silk. The coarser qualities are used in cordage and the rejections and cuttings are utilised in the manufacture of paper. (Report of the Bengal Jute Enquiry Committee, 1934, pages 80 and 82.)

1(8). Jute is the pre-eminent commercial crop of undivided Bengal. It is cultivated in almost all the districts, although its cultivation is restricted to only 10 per cent. of the total net cropped area. Jute is also grown in the neighbouring Provinces of Bihar, Orissa and Assam. Undivided Bengal claimed about 90 per cent. of the total produce in all the Provinces taken together. (Report of the Bengal Jute Enquiry Committee, page 71.) The density of cultivation is, however, very low in all the jute-growing districts except Mymensingh, Dacca, Faridpur, Tippera, Pabna, Bogra and Rajshahi which account for nearly 80 per cent. of the total acreage of jute in undivided Bengal. (Report of the Bengal Jute Enquiry Committee, 1939, page 3.) After the partition of the old Province of Bengal on the 15th August, 1947, all these districts have been included in the Province of East Bengal in Pakistan. In 1941-42 jute and jute manufactures accounted for nearly 50 per cent. of the value of export trade of undivided Bengal and 25 per cent. of the value of export trade of British India. The importance of jute and jute manufactures as an earner of foreign exchange cannot, therefore, be overestimated. At the present stage after the partition, all the jute mills of undivided Bengal are now situated in West Bengal, while most of the jute-growing areas are in the Province of East Bengal in Pakistan.

1(9). The labour force in the jute mills is drawn from the landless agriculturists of West Bengal and East Bengal and of other Provinces who have been lured by wages higher than agricultural wages at home. In the initial stages, that is, till about the close of the last century, the labour was drawn principally from the agriculturists of the locality around the mills. With the expansion of the industry and with the spread of knowledge in the neighbouring Provinces that work was available in the factories in and about Calcutta, labourers from Bihar, U.P., C.P., and Madras began to seek work in them. Emigration from U.P. is estimated to have been the heaviest in West Bengal. ("The Indian Working Class" by Dr R. Mukherjee, page 3.) The Bengali Hindu and Muslim form only a small percentage of the total labour force in the jute mills in West Bengal, and they are mostly engaged in the Weaving Departments. The jute mill labour in Bengal is, therefore, of a heterogeneous composition hailing from different Provinces and speaking different tongues.

1(10). The rapid development of the industry and the increase of the landless class which migrated from rural areas for industrial employment hardly allowed adequate time for a smooth adjustment between the management and labour and produced conditions of employment that created perennial disputes and strikes resulting in inefficiency and loss of production. There were 226 strikes in jute mills in West Bengal during the period from 1938 to 1946 and the man hours lost in 1938 were more than 15 million and those in 1946 were above 34 million. In each of the intervening years there was a loss of 3 to 8 million man hours on account of these strikes. In 1929 there was a general strike affecting about 272,000 jute mill workers in West Bengal and lasting 11 weeks, directed against the employers' decision to increase the working hours from 50 to 60 per week. There was another general strike in 1938 involving 219,800 workers, and a loss of wages of about 35½ lakhs of rupees. The workers demanded restoration of the cut in wages effected in 1932. ("The Indian Working Class" by Dr. R. Mukherjee, pages 347 and 154.)

1(11). The discontent that flared up in strikes had its origin in the conditions of wages and of employment which were not considered by the workers as satisfactory. In their Report (1931), the Royal Commission on Labour in India have quoted the following evidence of the Government of Bengal: "Perhaps, in no industry in the world, situated in such a circumscribed area, is the wage position more inchoate. The mills, grouped under different managing agents, work under wage systems which have developed many idiosyncrasies during the long or short years of their existence. Even in mills under the same managing agents, there are differences which, to persons not acquainted with the position, seem incredible. For example, in two mills situated in the same area and separated from each other by little more than a boundary wall, under the same managing agents there is practically not a single entry of wages which is the same. In three mills under the same managing agents situated within a stone's throw of each other, the rates in one mill have for many years been higher than those in the other two mills. In other groups of mills, situated close to each other and under different managing agents the wage rates in individual mills are kept, or are supposed to be kept, strictly secret." The Commission felt the need of standardisation in jute mills and recommended that "the industry, which has all the advantages of a high degree of internal organisation on the employers' side should take early steps to investigate the possibility of standardisation of wage rates, both for time and piece workers, associating with it representatives of bona fide Trade Unions". (Report of the Royal Commission on Labour in India, pages 215 and 216.) Even now the question of standardisation of wages has not been taken up by the industry and it is undoubtedly a matter of great urgency. The Indian working class has been hit by the soaring cost of living and has been making insistent demands for favourable revision of wages and dearness allowance. The workers' demand better housing and sanitary conditions, improved medical, educational and welfare facilities. They are aggrieved that retiral benefits were not suitable to their needs. They want better security of service and more reasonable service rules. These are some of the principal grievances which have given rise to pronounced labour unrest in the Jute Textile Industry.

1(12). The Industrial Disputes Act (Act XIV of 1947), which lays down provisions for compulsory adjudication of industrial disputes by Tribunals, came into operation on 1st April 1947. On the 15th August 1947, the Province of West Bengal was created on partition of the old Province of Bengal and on that very date the Government of West Bengal in the Department of Commerce, Labour and Industries referred the disputes in the Jute Textile Industry in West Bengal to us for adjudication. As already stated the 89 jute mills involved in this adjudication have been mentioned in the list under Appendix I. In accordance with the order of reference the workmen involved are represented by the following 5 Unions:—

(1) The Jute Mill Workers' Federation, Bengal, of 115E, Dharmatala Street, Calcutta.

(2) The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union of 249, Bowbazar Street, Calcutta.

(3) The Bengal National Chamber of Labour of 51, Chittaranjan Avenue, Calcutta.

(4) The Bansberia Mill Employees' Union of P.O. Bansberia, district Hooghly.

(5) The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union of 3/1, Kali Banarji Lane, Howrah.

1(13). Notices were issued on the individual mills through their managing agents as well as on the five Unions on 10th October 1947. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation, the Bengal National Chamber of Labour and the Bansberia Mill Employees' Union filed their written statements on 3rd November 1947. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union and the Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union filed their written statements on 6th November 1947. All the individual mills including three non-member mills authorised the Indian Jute Mills' Association to represent them in the adjudication proceedings before this Tribunal, and in fact they were so represented throughout the proceedings. The Prabartak Jute Mills, however, addressed the Tribunal separately on the 8th June 1948, although it adopted the submissions made by the Indian Jute Mills' Association in the rest of the proceedings. The Indian Jute Mills' Association on behalf of all the jute mills filed a written statement on 25th November 1947. The Prabartak Jute Mills filed a separate written statement with regard to certain special features on the same date. A summary of demands made by the Unions, as prepared by the Indian Jute Mills' Association in tabular form and as filed before the Tribunal along with the Association's written statement, is appended to this award as Appendix II.

1(14). The appearances were as follows:—Sri N. Dutt Majumdar, Counsel, Sri P. K. Basu, Counsel, Sri S. K. Basu, Advocate, Sri D. L. Sen Gupta, Pleader, and Sri Phani Ghose, General Secretary of the Federation, appeared for the Bengal Jute Mill Workers' Federation. Sri Indrajit Gupta, Organising Secretary of the Union, Sri Sushil Roy, Sri Sudhin Pramanik and Sri Ajoy Das Gupta appeared for the Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour was represented by Janab Shafaatullah Khan, General Secretary, Sri Rajani Mukherji, Vice-President, and Sri Jatindra Nath Mitra. The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union was represented by Sri Shib Nath Banerji, the President of the Union. The Bansberia Mill Employees' Union was represented by the General Secretary Sri Phani Bhusan Mallik, Sri Amiyadhan Mukherji and Sri Kunja Lal Bhattacharji.

1(15). Sri S. Chaudhuri, Counsel, Dr. H. G. Waight, Counsel, Sri P. P. Ginwala, Counsel, Sri S. C. Sen, Advocate, assisted by Messrs. Orr Dignam and Co., Solicitors, and Mr. J. Lee, Labour Adviser of the Indian Jute Mills' Association, Mr. J. J. B. Sutherland, Deputy Secretary, and Mr. W. D. Bryden, Acting Deputy Secretary of the Indian Jute Mills' Association, represented the Indian Jute Mills' Association in the proceedings before the Tribunal. Sri D. N. Chaudhuri, Director, and Sri N. K. Mukherji, Advocate, appeared for the Prabartak Jute Mills.

1(16). The issues, that is, the points in disputes, were settled on 5th December 1947, and the main hearing commenced on 5th January 1948, after the respective parties were given the opportunity of inspecting a number of documents filed. The hearing proper took place on 60 days with breaks in every week, to enable the Judges of the Tribunal to attend to work in connection with other individual industrial disputes. The Judges of the Tribunal inspected the Bengal Jute Mills and the Fort William Jute Mills at Howrah on 2nd December 1947, the Angus Jute Mills at Bhadreswar in Hooghly district on 12th March 1948, the Birla Jute Mills at Birlapur in 24-Parganas district on 24th March, 1948, the Howrah Jute Mills at Howrah on 12th May 1948, and the Prabartak Jute Mills at Belghurria in 24-Parganas district on 19th May 1948.

1(18). Issue No. 9 (Procedure for retrenchment and payment of compensation) and Issue No. 26 (Specific cases of victimisation as per list) were heard in part on 18th, 23rd and 24th February 1948. Further proceedings in respect of these two issues were stayed by the High Court of Calcutta by a prohibitory notice in a proceeding for a writ of certiorari started by the Presidency Jute Mill, which is one of the mills involved in this reference. The notice was issued by the High Court on 8th March 1948, and was served on the Tribunal on 5th April 1948. The proceedings with regard to Issues Nos. 9 and 26 have accordingly been stayed. We are refraining from giving any award in respect of these two issues. The Tribunal will consider the other issues and give awards in respect of those issues only.

ISSUE No. 1.—Recognition of Trade Unions by the employers.

2. We now proceed to consider the issues one by one and take up Issue No. 1 relating to the question of recognition of individual Trade Unions by the respective employers. The claim regarding recognition was put forward by all the Unions appearing before us. During the hearing, however, Janab Shafaatullah Khan on behalf of the Bengal National Chamber of Labour withdraws, by a formal application, the claim for recognition. Sri S. K. Basu, Advocate, on behalf of the Jute Mill Workers' Federation, however, insists that the claim should be considered by the Tribunal. It has been contended by Sri S. Chaudhuri, Counsel, on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills Association that the question of recognition of Trade Unions is not an industrial dispute. The first question, therefore, is whether the subject-matter of this issue constitutes an industrial dispute at all within the meaning of section 2(k) of the Industrial Disputes Act. The Chairman of this Tribunal had an occasion to give a decision on this point in considering Issue No. 12 in the matter of an industrial dispute between the Bengal Chemical and Pharmaceutical Works, Ltd., and its employees, the relevant award having been published in the Calcutta Gazette by the Government of West Bengal, Department of Commerce, Labour and Industries, order No. 756Lab., dated the 5th November 1947. We have carefully considered that decision and we agree generally with the view taken by the Adjudicator in that award. The question is whether the claim for recognition is an industrial dispute or in other words whether the Tribunal has jurisdiction to make an award on an issue of recognition of Trade Unions. If the Tribunal has no such jurisdiction, we cannot proceed any further. Under section 2(k) of the Industrial Disputes Act, an "industrial dispute" means any dispute or difference between employers and workmen which is connected with the employment or non-employment or the terms of employment or with the conditions of labour, of any person. The question of recognition of a Trade Union may undoubtedly form a subject-matter of a dispute between employers and workmen. But in order that the dispute may constitute an industrial dispute, it must be connected with the employment or non-employment or the terms of employment or with the conditions of labour of any person. On carefully considering the matter we fail to see any connection such as is required in order to convert a dispute into an industrial dispute. It has been argued by Sri S. K. Basu on behalf of the Federation that the workers have a right of collective bargaining to be exercised through recognised Trade Unions and as the Trade Union concerned is to do the bargaining, a matter of recognition of the Union by the employer is an industrial dispute. This contention, to our mind, is not sound. The right of collective bargaining is an inherent and fundamental right of the workers and cannot form the subject-matter of a contract of employment nor can it be, or be connected with, any term of employment. We must, therefore, unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that a claim of recognition of Trade Unions by the employees is not an industrial dispute within the meaning of the Industrial Disputes Act and this Tribunal has no jurisdiction to deal with the issue at all.

2(1). That a Tribunal set up under the Industrial Disputes Act has no jurisdiction to make an Award on an issue of this kind is presumably the reason why the Legislature thought fit to enact the Indian Trade Union (Amendment) Act XLV of 1947. The circumstances amply indicate that the Legislature was perfectly conscious of the position that a Tribunal under the Industrial Disputes Act had no such jurisdiction, and it would not be legal for any authority under any existing Statute to make an order of compulsory recognition of a Trade Union by the employer concerned. The Indian Trade Union (Amendment) Act of 1947 is now on the Statute Book. This very necessary enactment provides for the machinery for dealing with questions of recognition of Trade Unions, in so far as it lays down provisions for setting up Labour Courts for the purpose and has provided for a definite procedure and has enjoined the consideration of certain conditions for recognition. It is perfecty clear that this Tribunal cannot take upon itself the task which the law requires a Labour Court to perform. We may state in passing that the Trade Unions which have appeared before us in the present proceedings do not comprise all the individual Trade Unions concerned in the Jute Textile Industry, and as the Trade Unions concerned have not appeared individually before this Tribunal it would not be practicable for us to consider the question of recognition of individual Unions, even if it were permissible for us, under the law, to do so. In the result we come to the conclusion that this Tribunal has no jurisdiction to deal with Issue No. 1, and we accordingly reject the claim.

ISSUE No. 2.—Standardisation of occupational nomenclature and categories of workers.

3. We now pass on to deal with Issue No. 2 relating to the standardisation of occupational nomenclature and categories of workers in the different departments of a jute mill. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation, while dealing with the question of minimum basic wages in its written statement, referred to the division of workers into the categories "unskilled", "semi-skilled", and "skilled", and stressed the question of a proper standardised classification of workers. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union, in its written statement, demanded the classification of all categories of jute mill labour including the mechanical staff and durwans as "unskilled", "semi-skilled", "skilled" and "highly skilled" according to the degree of skill, qualifications, and risks demanded by their different occupations and fixation of wage-scales proportionately higher than the minimum for each category.

The demand was apparently made with the idea of introducing a basis for standardisation, throughout the Jute Textile Industry, of wages and rates for the same category of workers and types of work. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour, in its written statement, while dealing with the question of minimum basic wages indicated the division of workers into the distinct categories of "unskilled", "semi-skilled", "skilled", and "highly skilled". In course of the hearing the Unions generally insisted on standardisation of occupational nomenclature and the division of workers according to the degrees of skill required in pursuing the different occupations. The Unions insisted on the proposed standardisation not only in respect of the manual workers in the different departments of a jute mill but also in respect of members of the clerical staff. As regards the clerical workers we propose to deal with their case later on, and for the moment we shall discuss the question of standardisation in respect of the manual workers alone.

3(1). A list of occupations was filed by the Indian Jute Mills' Association as early as on 13th January 1948. Another fuller list was filed by the Association on 5th May 1948. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour filed a still fuller list with regard to the subject of standardisation of occupational nomenclature, and the representatives of the Indian Jute Mills Association were asked to consider if they would agree to the fuller list presented by the Bengal National Chamber of Labour. Meanwhile we proceeded to examine on the spot all the occupations of not only manual workers but also of clerical workers with reference to the lists filed by the parties, and for this purpose we inspected all the departments of a jute mill with particular reference to the nature of the occupation pursued by each worker. We came back with the impressions obtained from our personal inspection of the minute details of the different occupations. On a subsequent date of hearing the Indian Jute Mills Association accepted the list of occupations furnished by the Bengal National Chamber of Labour, and in the light of our personal experience we were able to adopt that list with some additions as the final list showing a scheme of standardised occupational nomenclature. Information as to which categories of workers were piece-workers or time-workers was subsequently obtained in the presence of all parties concerned and was incorporated in the list. The final list of occupational nomenclature, as agreed to by all the parties concerned and as adopted by us, appears in Appendix IV. The list shows the various departments in a jute mill and the categories of workers who may be found employed there. The list is comprehensive as far as the entire industry is concerned. But it is not indicative of the complement found in a particular mill. In fact in the course of our local inspections we discovered that all categories of workers did not exist in all the mills, and in some concerns, particularly in the smaller mills, occupations were sometimes combined in one person. Apart from these divergences arising from different local conditions, we are satisfied that the list given in Appendix IV, which we have adopted and which shall form part of our award, represents a satisfactory scheme of standardised occupational nomenclature. The Indian Jute Mills Association in its written statement and in course of the hearing in the earlier part of the proceedings insisted, we believe rightly, on the appointment of assessors for advising the Tribunal on the question of standardisation of occupational nomenclature. Unfortunately, however, the Unions could not see their way to agree to the proposal, and eventually the idea of appointing technical assessors for the purpose fell through. We consider that technical assessors could have been immensely helpful to us for the purpose. But as matters stood we had to proceed even without technical assessors, as best as we could, and we are glad that a final list of standardised occupational nomenclature has emerged out of our discussions with the parties, and it is hoped that this list will be considered as satisfactory by all parties concerned. The failure to get the assistance of technical assessors was indeed regrettable with regard to the consideration of this issue. But we feel that it was infinitely more regrettable in the case of the issue of standardisation of wage rates, which subject we shall deal with later on.

3(2). The question has arisen as to whether we should divide the manual workers into definite categories like "unskilled", "semi-skilled", "skilled" and "highly skilled", or into a larger number of categories on any other basis. The representatives of the Unions were insistent that the former method should be adopted. They also insisted that wage rates should be standardised on the basis of a division of workers into categories of those varieties. It is noticeable that in paragraph 222 on page 124 of the Report of the Central Pay Commission, a definite reference has been made to these categories depending on degrees of skill. The Indian Jute Mills' Association opposed the idea on the ground that classification of workers on the basis of so-called degrees of skill was impracticable. We have carefully applied our minds to the subject in the light of our own observations in course of our watching the different categories of workers at work in the different departments of a jute mill. We are not unmindful of the opinion expressed by an authority like Sri S. R. Deshpande in his Report on an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India. On page 8, second paragraph, for instance, he observes as follows:—"Workers in the Batching Department with the probable exception of selectors are nearly all unskilled men. Jute cutters may also be classified as unskilled. In the Weaving Department, with the exception of coolies and sweepers, all the workers can be regarded as skilled. The same applies to the Spinning Department where with the exception of coolies, sweepers and shifter boys, the rest are regarded as skilled." With great respect to the author, we must say, in the light of our own observations on the spot and of what we have heard in course of the arguments advanced by the parties including representatives of the Indian Jute Mills' Association, that the views expressed in the paragraph referred to are more or less of a sweeping nature and do not fit in with the real factors governing the different occupations. On pages 26 and 27 of the Report, Sri S. R. Deshpande observes as follows:—"The actual framing of a standardisation scheme is a matter for technicians. If a layman, however, can venture on a suggestion it would appear that, while dealing with time-rate occupations at any rate, in spite of multiplicity of the occupations, it should be possible to tackle the issue without undue difficulty. It may look over-simplifying the issue but a possible approach to the problem appears to be first of all, to standardise the occupations then group them into half a dozen or even less number of classes according to the degree of skill and effort required and fix a minimum for the lowest-paid class which minimum should represent at the moment an equitable basis between capital and labour." We, however, feel that the term "skill" is very difficult to define, and it appears to us that the term is frequently being used in a sense which probably covers many ingredients other than what may strictly be called "skill" in the ordinary sense of the term. The Unions appearing before us, particularly the Jute Mill Workers' Federation and the Bengal National Chamber of Labour, presented a comprehensive list of proposed wage rates in accordance with the division of manual workers into specific categories of "unskilled", "semi-skilled", "skilled" and "highly skilled", with some subdivisions of these categories in some cases. We find that what is really meant by the term "skill" is not merely skill or dexterity or practical knowledge of how a particular piece of work is to be done, but it is also supposed to include several other ingredients such as the mental and physical application and attention required, the responsibility and mental and physical strain involved and other factors. We also find that it would be extremely difficult even for technical experts to divide the workers pursuing all these different occupations in a jute mill involving different degrees of dexterity, mental and physical application, responsibility, attention, strain, etc., into stereotyped categories under the headings of "unskilled", "semi-skilled", "skilled" and "highly skilled", etc. We feel certain that in attempting to devise a classification of this nature a great deal of arbitrariness is bound to come into operation, for the simple reason that there are many border line occupations which can be put equally well either in the lower category or in the next higher. On giving our most careful consideration to the whole question in the light of what we have personally observed and of the materials placed at our disposal we come to the unhesitating conclusion that it is neither practicable nor necessary for our purpose to classify the manual workers into categories depending on the element of so-called "skill". We have, therefore, decided to adopt a scheme of standardised occupational nomenclature as per Appendix IV, and we are of opinion that for the purpose of evolving a scheme of standardisation of wage rates it will be quite adequate. The result will be that for practical purposes each occupation will stand as a category by itself. How this will be the most practicable and helpful way of evolving a basis for standardisation of wage rates will be evident in subsequent portions of our Award in which we shall deal with the subject of wage rates for the different occupations.

3(3). We now come to the question of standardisation of occupational nomenclature in respect of the clerical workers. The Unions, particularly, the Bengal National Chamber of Labour submitted a tentative list of occupational nomenclature of the clerical staff. We had the occasion of testing this list on the spot during our inspection of the different departments of a jute mill. We find that all the occupations do not exist in all the mills, and in some mills, particularly the smaller ones, some occupations happen to be combined in one person. Apart from this aspect of the matter, the question is whether it is practicable or useful to introduce any standardised system of nomenclature in respect of the clerical workers. The members of the clerical staff work not only in the departments of a jute mill but also in offices outside the factory. It has been difficult for the parties to present a full list of occupations prevailing in all places where clerks are employed and it has not been possible for us also to obtain complete information. On giving very careful consideration to the whole subject we are of opinion that it is not really necessary for our purpose, in view of what we are going to direct in respect of the revision of wage rates regarding the clerical staff, to draw up a scheme of standardisation of occupational nomenclature in respect of clerical workers. What we mean will be evident from the later portions of our award in which we shall deal with the question of wage rates.

3(4). In the result, we do not propose to do anything more with regard to the subject-matter of standardisation of occupational nomenclature, and we adopt the scheme of standardisation of occupational nomenclature in respect of the manual workers alone as shown in Appendix IV and we make our award accordingly.

ISSUE No. 3.—Minimum basic wages for manual workers and clerks.

4. We next take up the question of minimum basic wages for manual workers and clerks under Issue No. 3. In considering this issue we shall naturally go into certain factors relating to the question of dearness allowance as in arriving at a standard of minimum wages for manual workers or for clerical workers, we shall be required to decide upon the standard of total emoluments in the light of the prevailing circumstances including the element of increased cost of living. In dealing with the present issue, however, we shall leave aside the details relating to dearness allowance which will be more appropriately discussed under Issue No. 6. At the very outset we may briefly state the nature of the claims put forward by the different Unions regarding the subject of minimum basic wages. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation has demanded the fixation of minimum basic wages for each category of workers after proper standardised classification, and also the fixation of dearness allowance with room for future adjustment. The Federation has claimed that the minimum basic wages of manual workers including durwans should be Rs.40 per month and the minimum dearness allowance should be Rs.35 per month. It has also claimed that the minimum basic wages for middle class employees, that is, the clerical staff should be Rs.70 per month along with dearness allowance on a sliding scale, as laid down in the Report of the Central Pay Commission, depending on variations in the cost of living index figures. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has asked for fixation of minimum basic wages for an unskilled manual worker at Rs.40 per month, and for a clerical worker at Rs.80 per month, along with dearness allowance at a flat rate of Rs.45 per month. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour has asked for fixation of minimum basic wages for an unskilled manual worker at Rs.40 per month, for a semi-skilled manual worker at Rs.50 per month, for a skilled manual worker at Rs.60 per month, for a highly skilled manual worker at Rs.80 per month, and for a durwan at Rs.60 per month, along with dearness allowance at Rs.45 per month, which, it is urged, should not be linked with attendance. The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union has claimed minimum basic wages for an unskilled manual worker at Rs.40 per month, and for a clerical worker at Rs.80 per month, along with dearness allowance at Rs.45 per month. The Bansberia Jute Mill Employees' Union has asked for minimum basic wages for a clerical worker at Rs.80 per month and for a durwan at Rs.40 per month. The Indian Jute Mills' Association has agreed that the subject-matter of the present issue is pre-eminently a question to be determined by this Tribunal, and the need of increasing the prevailing scales of minimum wages or other wages is not denied. With regard to the fixation of wages on a basic of standardisation, the Association suggested the appointment of technical assessors for assisting the Tribunal. As already indicated, no agreement could, however, be reached on the question of appointment of assessors, and the Tribunal has had to proceed on its own account in the light of the facts and circumstances made available to it by the parties concerned.

4(1). At this stage we may consider the present state of things with regard to the scales of wages. We have already referred in paragraph 1(11) of our award to the observations of the Royal Commission on Labour in India, on pages 215-16 of the Report, embodying a recommendation to the effect that the Jute Textile Industry should take early steps to investigate the possibility of standardisation of wage rates, both for time and piece-workers associating with it representatives of bona fide trade unions. We have already indicated that a scheme of standardisation of wages is a crying need of the hour, and in spite of difficulties we have taken upon ourselves the responsible task of erecting a wage structure, on a basis of standardisation, with regard to all categories of workers. The fixation of minimum basic wages along with a proper scale of dearness allowance is obviously the foundation on which such a wage structure can be built. The subject of Issue No. 3, therefore, is of the utmost importance, and we must come to a decision on this subject with the greatest care possible. Before proceeding any further, let us examine the standards of wages which are prevailing at the moment. We find the following observations on page 19 of Sri S. R. Deshpande's Report on an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India (1946) where he gives the result of his investigation in connection with 21 jute mills in West Bengal:—"Taking all the workers in the selected occupations, it will be seen that the basic wages of 20·07 per cent. lie within the wage group Rs.2-8 to Rs.3-8 per week, of 40·63 per cent. in the wage group of Rs.3-8 to Rs.5 per week, of 33·47 per cent. in the wage group of Rs.5 to Rs.8 per week and of 5·83 per cent. within the wage group of Rs.8 to Rs.9 per week and over." It appears that these were the prevailing standards of wages even after the increments to the extent of 10 per cent. allowed in 1939. Sri S. R. Deshpande's Report seems to indicate that the minimum basic wages prevailing in the industry were something like Rs.2-8 per week in or about the year 1945. It appears that from April 1946 increments to the extent of 15 per cent. of the basic wages were allowed. From the figures of wages which have been submitted to the Tribunal by the Indian Jute Mills' Association and which have not been controverted by the Unions on behalf of the workers, it appears that the minimum basic wages per month consisting of 4⅓ weeks or 208 working hours, prevailing at the present moment, amount to Rs.18. It further appears that while there is no system of dearness allowance called as such at present, an allowance called amenity allowance at Rs.4-8 per week or Rs.19-8 per month consisting of 4⅓ weeks or 208 working hours (amenity allowance being linked with attendance) is allowed, and further different items of food are supplied to the workers at concession rates from the mill ration shops, the cash value of the food concession being, on the average, something like Rs.2 per week or about Rs.8-10-9 per month. The value of the food concession allowed to the workers under the present arrangement is essentially a part of what we understand by dearness allowance, and the present amenity allowance is nothing but dearness allowance. Therefore, the dearness allowance, consisting of the amenity allowance and the value of the food concession, is something like Rs.28-2-9 or, roughly speaking Rs.28 per month. The minimum total emolument of the lowest paid manual worker, therefore, comes to Rs.18 plus Rs.28 or Rs.46 per month. The lowest claim put forward by the Unions in respect of the minimum total emolument of an unskilled manual worker is Rs.75 per month as against the present figure of Rs.46 per month. On behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association it has been conceded that some rise in the total minimum emolument is called for to meet the needs of the prevailing situation. To that end the Association has suggested that the scale of minimum basic wages in respect of an unskilled manual worker may be fixed at Rs.26 for a month of 26 working days or 208 working hours, which would work out to be a rate of 2 annas per hour. The Association has further suggested that there should be no increase in the standard of dearness allowance, consisting of amenity allowance and the value of food concession, which is being allowed at present. In other words the offer made by the Indian Jute Mills' Association is to the effect that the total minimum emolument of an unskilled manual worker should be roughly Rs.26 plus Rs.28 or Rs.54 per month as against the present scale of Rs.46 per month, a total rise of Rs.8 per month being allowed. Apart from other considerations which have been urged before us in support of the proposals made by the Association, it has been contended that the scale proposed compares very favourably with the standards which prevailed in or about the year 1939 prior to the War, when, we are told, the total emolument of the lowest paid worker was in the neighbourhood of Rs.13 per month. Assuming that the level of prices in recent times is in the neighbourhood of 3¼ times of the pre-war level, the scale of Rs.13 in 1939 would be equivalent to something like Rs.43 per month under the circumstances prevailing at present. It is further pointed out that the scale of total emolument proposed by the Association compares very favourably with the average income per capita in this country, which is said to be below Rs.100 per annum. The average worker's family may be taken to consist of four persons, namely, the worker, his wife, and two children, who may be taken to be equivalent to three adults or consumption units, on the very widely accepted supposition that the wife constitutes ·8 unit and the two children together constitute 1·2 units. Taking the average income per capita in India to be Rs.100 per annum, the total yearly income of the family would be Rs.400, or the total monthly income would be in the neighbourhood of Rs.34. The contention of the Association is that the offer of Rs.54 per month, by way of minimum total emolument, compares very favourably with the result we have obtained on the basis of average income per capita of the inhabitants of this country. The Association has, therefore, urged that we should accept the offer and fix the minimum basic wages of an unskilled manual worker at Rs.26 per month and maintain the present scale of dearness allowance.

4(2). Janab Shafaatullah Khan, on behalf of the Bengal National Chamber of Labour, has contended that the minimum total emolument of Rs.13 per month for the lowest paid manual worker which prevailed before the war was totally insufficient for meeting the actual needs of the worker and his family. According to his calculation the cost of living of an adult constituting one consumption unit in or about 1939, on the basis of the barest necessaries of life exclusive of cost of housing, clothing, etc., would amount to Rs.4-10 per month, the details of which are on the following lines: Re.1 for 10 seers of rice, 12 annas 6 pies for 5 seers of atta, 12 annas 9 pies for a little over 2 seers of dal, 6 annas 6 pies for a little over 1½ seers of gur, 8 annas 6 pies for a little over 1 seer of mustard oil, 1 anna 9 pies for a little over 1 seer of salt, 8 annas for fuel and 8 annas for miscellaneous eatables per month. Janab Khan has arrived at the figure of Rs.4-10 per month as the cost of food and fuel per month per adult, and our impression is that this calculation leans rather on the conservative side.

4(3). The Unions have drawn our attention to paragraph 76 on pages 40-41 of Volume I of the Report of the Court of Enquiry presided over by Mr. Justice Rau, constituted to investigate the question of dearness allowance for railway employees. The relevant portions of the paragraph run as follows:—"In a pamphlet on 'Balanced Diets' (Pamphlet No. 8) issued by the Bombay Presidency Baby and Health Week Association in 1935 and described by Sir Robert McCarrison (the then Director of the Nutrition Research Laboratories in Coonoor) as accurate in detail and the best pamphlet of its kind he had ever seen, the authors estimate the minimum cost of a balanced diet (including fuel for cooking) in Bombay city at Rs.5 per adult per month. This was at the wholesale prices then current in Bombay and the above monthly cost is described by them as 'very nearly the minimum that can be attained in cities like Bombay' to maintain the worker 'in a fairly healthy condition,' which we assume to be the same thing as the cost of minimum subsistence. The early part of 1935, when the pamphlet was issued, was a comparatively cheap period in Bombay, when the cost of living index stood at 98 or 99. From the evidence given before us we find that wholesale prices are usually about 10 per cent. lower than retail prices, and a corresponding percentage must be added on this account. At the average pre-war retail prices, the figure works out to Rs.5-13. We have seen references to later estimates which place the cost at a higher figure; but assuming for the present that the minimum cost during the year immediately preceding the War was no more than Rs[illegible]13 per adult per month in Bombay, it follows that any income which left a worker of that city, having a normal family of 4 members to support (equivalent to, say, 3 adults or consumption units, the father counting as one unit, the mother as ·8 unit and the 2 children together 1·2 units), less than about Rs.17-8 per month for food and fuel cannot be called adequate, whether that income accrued to him as the result of the Manmad scale or the Chandwani scale or the revised scale. Dr. Ackroyd, the present Director of the Nutrition Research Laboratories, Coonoor, in his Health Bulletin No. 23 (1938 edition) prescribes a well-balanced and adequate diet whose cost works out to Rs.5 or Rs.6 per adult per month". The above calculations relate to a pre-war period, and the prevailing cost of living index at the time in question is said to be below 100. Although these calculations relate to the Bombay area, looking at the cost of living index figure prevailing at that time in that arrea we feel disposed to use these figures for our purposes with reference to our present issue in respect of the workmen in the Jute Textile Industry in the Calcutta Industrial area. It is noticeable that the minimum cost of a balanced diet including fuel was calculated to be Rs.5 per adult per month or rather Rs.5-13 per adult per month during the pre-war period. Dr. Ackroyd, who is accepted to be an authority on the subject of nutrition, has calculated that a well-balanced and adequate diet would cost, in pre-war days, about Rs.5 or Rs.6 per adult per month. During the hearing before us, Janab Shafaatullah Khan submitted calculations which would put the minimum cost of a bare diet including fuel at Rs.4-10 per adult per month. Janab Khan's calculation is not inconsistent with the above calculation in respect of a well-balanced and adequate diet. On the whole we are of opinion that it will be fair and safe to proceed on the figure of Rs.5 per month as the minimum cost of a proper diet including fuel for an adult in the pre-war period, say, in the year 1939.

4(4). With reference to this figure of Rs.5 per adult per month we may now proceed to calculate the total cost of living of an average manual worker's family. On page 15 of Dr. A. C. Roy Choudhury's Report on an Enquiry into the Standard of Living of Jute Mill Workers in Bengal (1930) in Table II under the wage group of Rs.20 and below Rs.30 which is relevant for our purposes, we find that it was found on investigation that the cost of food constituted 64·8 per cent. of the total cost of living, and the cost of fuel and lighting was to the extent of 7·9 per cent. of the total. Taking 3·2 per cent. to be the cost of fuel alone, the cost of food and fuel would be 68 per cent. We have come to the conclusion that the starting point of our calculation should be Rs.5 per month per adult as the cost of food and fuel. The total cost of food and fuel for a worker's family consisting of himself, his wife and two children, equivalent to 3 consumption units, would be Rs.15 per month. As this would constitute 68 per cent. of the total cost of living, the latter would work out to be Rs. 22-1 per month. Roughly speaking the pre-war cost of living of an average worker's family may be taken to be Rs.22 per month. Now comes the question of the degree of rise in the cost of living at the present time. Some figures of cost of living, presumably prepared by statisticians, have reached us. But in this Province there are no recognised statistical authorities whose calculations in respect of cost of living index figures are accepted universally, and we find that the circumstances here are quite different from those prevailing in Bombay, where the cost of living index figures prepared by fully recognised authorities are universally accepted. With great respect to the authors of the different figures of cost of living index which we have come across, we find ourselves unable to accept these figures exactly at their face value, and we feel that some allowance must necessarily be made for inaccuracies which may have crept into these calculations. We notice that at the present moment there is an upward trend in the cost of living index figures. The question is what should be taken as the cost of living index figure for manual workers, say about the middle of the year 1948, for practical purposes. In spite of the upward trend of the cost of living index figures at the present moment, we consider it reasonable to fix our attention on a figure which may be expected to be something like an average figure for some time before and some time after the present moment. On giving careful thought to the whole question, we have come to the conclusion that the cost of living index figure for manual workers, for our present purposes, may be taken as 325. Taking the base as 100 in 1939 we may now calculate the total cost of living for an average worker's family on the basis of Rs.22 per month. The cost being 3¼ times the pre-war cost, the total cost of living under present conditions would work out to be Rs.71-8, or roughly Rs.71, as against the present total emolument of Rs.46 per month for the lowest paid manual worker in the industry. This would indicate a gap of Rs.25 per month.

4(5). The next question is whether we shall decide to fill up this gap wholly or in part, and, if the latter, to what extent. The Indian Jute Mills Association has proposed that this gap should be filled only to the extent of Rs.8 by way of adding that amount to the existing minimum basic wages of Rs.18, and the Association has suggested that there should be no addition to the existing scale of dearness allowance inclusive of the value of food concessions. On the other hand we have to apply our minds to the question of allowing what is called a "living wage" to every worker, and to that end it will be necessary to examine carefully how far we can go towards the target of Rs.71 as the total monthly emolument for the lowest paid manual worker. In this connection it will be pertinent to refer to certian observations made in paragraphs 48 and 49 on pages 30-32 of the Report of the Central Pay Commission (1947) which runs as follows:—"Certain writers who have discussed the subject have held that on the pre-war level of prices, Rs.30 per mensem would have represented the standard minimum required by a working class family of three consumption units in certain parts of India. In other parts of the country where climatic conditions are milder throughout the year, the amount might be somewhat smaller (see Dr. Radhakamal Mookerjee's 'Indian Working Class', pages 161-172, where several relevant data and opinions have been collected). The calculation is, however, largely hypothetical. The application of the minimum wage rule has always been recognised to be subject to limitations imposed by the general economy of the country. It may be applied to correct inequalities in the distribution system but not in disregard of the total production capacity of the country or without reference to the national income.   " In the words of the authors of the Bombay Plan, "no system of distribution however meticulously framed will help to raise the standard of living unless production is increased." How many of India's millions can to-day aspire to a physiologically adequate diet? Nutrition and health standards are affected both by the size and by the distribution of the total national income. Hence nutrition standards can be improved only by improvement of the total national income simultaneously with the adoption of policies tending towards its redistribution in favour of lower income classes. (See Worker's Nutrition and the Social Policy, I.L.O. 1936, page 114).    We are convinced that the State must now take some step forward in the direction of giving effect to the "living wage" principle in dealing with its employees. The question is, to what extent. What the Bombay Plan lays down for industry is a counsel that the State also cannot afford to ignore, viz., that in the initial stages, the minimum wages should be related to the normal wage level prevailing in the country, but it must be revised from time to time till it corresponds with a reasonable standard of living. Dr. Mookerjee cites Sir John Orr to show that even in Great Britain there are marked deficiencies between current wages and the standards of the minimum wage, and he recommends that in India a cautious beginning should be made in laying down minimum wage standards. The "standard of living" like the "poverty line" is to a large extent a "relative" conception. It reflects national conceptions and these are, in turn, shaped by the national income. The poverty line may be drawn at the point below which an individual would be undernourished or it may be drawn well above the nutritional minimum, at a point where a choice of diet and the chance of some cultural life or recreation will also be possible. We think that at present we can only aspire to rise above the "poverty line" in the first sense. According to recent calculations, the annual per capita income in India, even during the most favourable periods, has been much below Rs.100. Anything like a general advancement of the remuneration rates of the public services must depend upon the general increase in public wealth (see Gladden "The Civil Services, its problems and future", 1945, page 133). The power of a family to live up to a certain level of nutrition may be secured not only by improving its money income but also by increasing the purchasing power of the money it gets. The latter method of helping the earner will involve steps to secure (1) increase of production, and (2) control of prices. The State must adopt both these methods ("Workers Nutrition and the Social Policy", I.L.O. pamphlet, 1936, page 107). Further, the purchasing power of the worker's income, such as it is, can be improved by the extensian of co-operation in the sphere of sale and purchase, as that will reduce the price demanded from the purchaser and further secure to him refund of the surplus in the shape of a share of the profits.    Dr. Gadgil was one of the members of a Committee appointed to enquire into the conditions of textile workers in Bombay. It will be interesting to know what he has to say about it. While recognising the importance of bringing about as much improvement as possible in the remuneration paid to the lowest grades of employees, he adds "The main limiting consideration here is that of the financial resources of Government. It is hardly likely that a living wage of the type defined by the Bombay Textile Labour Enquiry Committee can immediately be granted to all Government employees." Referring to the Bombay Committee Report he said, "We had been asked to define 'living wage' and we have defined 'living wage' in certain objective terms; but there is no recommendation of any minimum or anything like that. The necessity of complying with a theoretical definition of 'living wage' cannot transcend financial limitations." He added that he could not agree with those who held that the minimum wage could not wait until the national income improved,   . The Chief Commissioner of Labour recognised that the amelioration in the condition of poorly paid employees could only be attained by stages with the progressive increase in national income. We may next refer to the observations made by Dr. Radhakamal Mukherjee, on pages 215-16 of "The Indian Working Class" (Second Edition), which run as follows: "There is nothing very unusual in such a wide gap between the standard of the minimum wage and current wages. For even in Great Britain where the average wage of industrial workers is 15 to 20 times greater than the industrial wage in India, Sir John Orr's well-known investigation has shown the marked deficiencies in terms of his norms for a considerable proportion of the British working class. Thus in India a cautious but systematic beginning has to be made in laying down minimum wage standards. This can be best done in the following manner:—

> By grading the wage regulations gently so as to prevent abrupt change of economic conditions. The Indian Minimum Wage Act may set a general minimum of Rs.20 per month for its first year, Rs.21 in the second year, and so on until at the end of ten years the norm is to become Rs.30."

4(6). We agree generally with the principles involved in the observations quoted above, and we are of opinion that the progress towards the desirable target should be by gradual stages. There should not be too great a gap between the standard of minimum wages fixed in a particular industry and the current level of wages in the locality and the industry should be given a proper chance to adjust and assimilate the new financial burdens imposed on it before any further burdens can properly be laid on it. The steps taken should be cautious in so far as it is necessary to maintain the existence and prosperity of the industry and its constituent units and it is not desirable to make labour too costly so as to produce a tendency for adjustment by way of retrenchment which would be a phenomenon eventually leading to conditions of unemployment. In the interest of both the industry and the working population we feel anxious to take such steps in the matter of fixation of minimum basic wages and dearness allowance as would not be ultimately harmful to either. The Jute Textile Industry, as we have already said, is the premier industry in West Bengal and we are bound to realise that our directions in this award may have far reaching effects on the entire economy of the Province. We can hardly fail to understand that the Jute Textile Industry cannot be compared with any other industry, such as, the Cotton Textile Industry, the Sugar Industry or the Steel Industry. Apart from other considerations the position is that the products of most other industries in this country have their markets within the country, while the products of the Jute Textile Industry have to find markets mostly in foreign countries. Jute goods manufactured here must compete with those manufactured abroad and also with possible substitutes like paper or cloth bags. The partition of the country has clearly ed to various complications, financial and otherwise, with regard to the vailability of raw jute. It is obvious, therefore, that various adjustments ve got to be made before one can feel like treading on firm and solid ound. We are anxious to see that capital invested in the Jute Textile dustry, both foreign and indigenous, does not feel nervous and does not think of migrating out of West Bengal, and to see the entire industry and all its constituent units maintaining a comfortable existence and prospering not only in their own interest but also simultaneously in the interest of the working population and of the people generally in this part of the country. At this stage, therefore, the question arises as to the extent to which the industry and its component units will be able to bear the extra burden. Sri M. P. Birla, Chairman of the Indian Jute Mills' Association, in course of his address before this Tribunal, presented a statement showing the profits which accrued to the industry during the years 1933 to 1947. We notice that the figures submitted to us, which are said to represent 90 per cent. of the Association on loomage basis, do not quite tally with the figures of profits made by the industry during the period 1928 to 1942 as shown on page 5 of Sri S. R. Deshpande's Report on Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India. Even then, from a general examination of the standard of profits already made during some of the past years, and on the basis of a general idea about the probable standard of profits which may be made now or in the future, we think it will be correct to say that the profits cannot be regarded as abnormal and the resources of the industry can by no means be said to be unlimited. The question of capacity of the industry and its constituent units, therefore, pre-eminently arises for our consideration just in the same way as in other cases of ordinary concerns. We have fully taken into consideration the standard of profits made available to us by the Chairman of the Association or by Sri Deshpande's Report, and we have done certain calculations for our own satisfaction. It has to be remembered that the standard of minimum basic wages and of dearness allowance which we shall fix will constitute the very foundation of the entire wage structure which we shall build in connection with certain other issues. In fixing this standard it will be necessary to bear in mind the other extra burdens which we shall impose in connection with other different issues relating to various amenities. It will be found in later portions of this award that we have imposed some extra burdens on the employers in the industry by way of providing for payments for periods of involuntary unemployment, improving the rules of leave and holidays to some extent, directing the establishment of cheap canteens, rest shelters, welfare or recreation centres, in practically all the jute mills and the establishment of creches in appropriate mills, and the improvement of medical facilities and educational facilities to some extent, and providing for benefits of provident fund and gratuity. It may be presumed that some further burdens are likely to be imposed on the employers in the direction of better educational facilities and also by the operation of the Employees' State Insurance Act. We have been unable to give any directions at the present stage regarding housing and house allowance, but it is not unlikely that some fresh burdens will be imposed on the employers with regard to this matter. We have left the question of profit-sharing bonus open in the absence of adequate data, but it is not unlikely that some fresh burdens in this direction may be imposed on comparatively prosperous concerns. Bearing all these things in mind and taking due notice of the principle of making progress towards the desirable target by gradual steps and not in a sudden jump, we have to consider how far we can go from the starting point of Rs.46 as the present minimum total emolument of the lowest paid manual worker towards the target of Rs.71 which we have found above. It is noticeable that the present rate of minimum emolument of a menial employee under the Government of West Bengal is Rs.51 per month, with an additional allowance of Rs.4 for an employee in the city of Calcutta. The gap of Rs.25 is not inconsiderable under the circumstances, and after giving our most anxious and careful consideration to all the factors which should be borne in mind in the interest of all concerned, we have decided to fix the minimum total remuneration at Rs.58-8 per month. This will mean a rise of Rs.12-8 per month in the emolument of the lowest paid manual worker. This standard of rise will permeate throughout the wage structure, as will appear in the award relating to the succeeding issues.

4(7). The next question is how we shall distribute the total emolument of Rs.58-8 between the basic wages and the dearness allowance. The Indian Jute Mills' Association has suggested only a rise of Rs.8 in the standard of basic wages, so that the new standard of minimum basic wages may be fixed at Rs.26 per month. Our decision means that there will be a further rise of Rs.4-8 per month. The question is whether we shall distribute this extra amount of Rs.4-8 between the two items or divert it to one of them. In this connection we may take into consideration the existing standard of disparity between the minimum basic wages of Rs.18 and the dearness allowance of Rs.28. The existing dearness allowance is considerably greater than the existing minimum basic wages, and the ratio between the basic wages and the dearness allowance is roughly in the neighbourhood of 125:200. We think that in view of the standard of rise in the cost of living index figures in recent years, the dearness allowance should continue to be greater than the minimum basic wages. If we fix the new minimum basic wages at Rs.26, the dearness allowance should be Rs.32-8. The ratio between the basic wages and the dearness allowance in that case would be roughly in the neighbourhood of 145:180. We think this is a fair distribution of the total emolument between the two items. Apart from this consideration, we have had to bring the case of Prabartak Jute Mills under Issue No. 29 into our calculations. We have come to the conclusion that the minimum basic wages in respect of manual workers should be the same in all the mills including the Prabartak Jute Mills which is a very small unit, and whatever consideration we may be able to make in favour of the Prabartak Jute Mills should be in the sphere of dearness allowance and not in that of minimum basic wages. In view of all these factors we have come to the conclusion that the minimum basic wages for the unskilled manual worker should be fixed at Rs.26 per month consisting of 4⅓ weeks or 208 working hours, and these wages should be linked with attendance. We, therefore, direct that the minimum basic wages for the manual workers be fixed at Rs.26 per month. It may be noted that the minimum total emolument of Rs.58-8 is greater than the minimum total emolument of Rs.55, as fixed for the lowest-paid manual worker by the Central Pay Commission. It may be further noted that with regard to the lowest paid manual worker, apart from the expenditure on various other amenities which we have imposed or which may be imposed on the employers in the near future, the cash burden imposed on an employer amounts to Rs.26 as minimum basic wages plus Rs.32-8 as dearness allowance plus Rs.1-10 as employer's contribution to the provident fund, which give a total of Rs.60-2 per month, which we consider to be a satisfactory figure in view of all the circumstances considered together. We have thus laid the first mile-stone which is a considerable way forward on the path of progress, and we leave the rest of the path to be covered by a few more mile-stones to be laid in the future by way of conciliation or adjudication or through any other machinery.

4(8). The other portion of the minimum total emolument amounting to Rs.32-8 per month constitutes the minimum scale of dearness allowance. The question as to how this amount will be distributed between the dearness allowance proper and the value of the food concessions allowed will be considered in due course under Issue No. 6. Other questions relating to dearness allowance will also be considered under that issue.

4(9). We next proceed to consider what should be the minimum basic wages for clerks or clerical workers. It will be found from the Report of the Central Pay Commission that that body fixed the minimum basic wages of a clerical worker, who is ordinarily a literate person of some education if not of high education, at Rs.55 per month. We understand that the existing minimum scale of wages for clerical workers in the jute mills is ordinarily Rs.40 per month. We find from the written statement submitted to us by the Bansberia Mill Employees' Union in connection with the Ganges Manufacturing Company, Ltd., Bansberia, that the basic wages of the lowest paid clerical worker in that concern is Rs.27 per month. It will be found in later portions of our award that we are fixing a flat rate of dearness allowance at Rs.32-8 per month inclusive of the value of food concessions, and with regard to dearness allowance we are not adopting any sliding scale depending on varying cost of living index figures or on ranges of wages. So the minimum total emolument, on the basis of minimum basic wages to the extent of Rs.55 would be Rs.87-8. We are of opinion that under prevailing conditions of life, a literate clerical worker belonging to the middle class of society may reasonably claim this standard of minimum emolument. We, therefore, direct that the minimum basic wages for clerks or clerical workers shall be Rs.55 per month. This direction in respect of clerical workers, however, will not apply to the case of Prabartak Jute Mills which we shall, in due course, deal with under Issue No. 29.

ISSUE No. 4.—Revision of piece-rates.

5. We now take up the question of revision of piece-rates under Issue No. 4. It will appear from the scheme of occupational nomenclature as per Appendix IV, under Issue No. 2 that several categories of workers are paid wages at piece-rates, some of them being paid both at piece-rates and at time rates. The purpose of the present issue is to consider whether the existing piece rates in respect of the appropriate categories of workmen in the different departments of a jute mill should be revised, and if so, on what lines. In so far as we have increased the minimum basic wages under Issue No. 3, it is inevitable that both the piece rates and time rates will have to undergo alteration in favour of the workmen. The subject of revision of piece rates bristles with a variety of technical complexities. For instance, the determination of piece rates for workmen in the Weaving Department involves consideration of various factors, such as the width of the cloth produced, the width of the loom used, the variations as regards porter and shots, the weight of the cloth produced, etc. In handling a matter like this, we would naturally like to be assisted by technical assessors. As we have already indicated elsewhere, the unfortunate position was that the appointment of technical assessors could not be agreed to by all parties concerned, though the Indian Jute Mills' Association was keen about such appointment in the beginning, and we also wished, in the interest of all concerned, to make such appointment. Eventually, no appointment of technical assessors could be made in the absence of any agreement on the subject. Towards the end of the proceedings the representatives of the Unions appeared to feel that it would have been better to appoint technical assessors. It was, however, too late at that time, and as it appeared that the appointment of technical assessors at that late stage might involve a further delay of several months the idea of appointing technical assessors was not seriously entertained and the only alternative for us was to proceed on the basis of such materials as might be made available to us by the Indian Jute Mills' Association and the representatives of the Unions. We have been anxious to make a start as regards standardisation of wages not only for time workers but also for piece-rate workers. We asked the Indian Jute Mills' Association to submit, with the help of the Association's technical experts, schemes of revision of piece-rates by way of standardisation, and gave the Association substantial time for that purpose. The Association submitted schemes in respect of different categories of piece-rate workers by instalments, and copies of these were made over to the representatives of the different Unions, who got ample opportunity of scrutinising them, and then we heard all the parties concerned with regard to the minute details. We found that the standards of piece-rates would depend intrinsically on the average standards of production, and it was necessary to scrutinise the Association's schemes with reference to the latter. We asked the Association and also the Unions to furnish us with figures relating to the average standards of production in respect of the different categories of piece-rate workers. Eventually, it was agreed that the Association would furnish these figures in respect of seven representative jute mills of different groups of managing agents, and the Association submitted figures of average production. Apart from the hearing of the different matters arising out of the schemes submitted by the Association, in the presence of all the parties, we have done certain calculations on our own behalf, and tested the Association's schemes on the basis of the figures relating to current average standards of production and of the figures of standardised basic wages determined by us in respect of the categories concerned as per Appendix VI under Issue No. 5. We have taken care to see that a piece-rate worker, working with diligence and efficiency and maintaining the average standard of production, does not earn less than the standard of basic wages which we have indicated in Appendix VI under Issue No. 5. In carrying out this scrutiny, we have made alterations in the schemes submitted by the Association in respect of some of the particulars, while in respect of other particulars we have been satisfied that the standards of piece-rates incorporated in the Association's schemes are correct and fair and we have accordingly adopted them.

5(1). At a very late stage of the proceedings, the spokesman of one of the Unions raised the contention that the issue under consideration did not involve standardisation of piece-rates. We may state at once that when we framed the issue under the heading "Revision of piece-rates". standardisation was at the back of the mind of every one concerned. Of course the practicability of such standardisation would have to be considered after hearing all the parties concerned. We have been aiming at standardisation of wage rates, wherever practicable, throughout the proceedings, and after being furnished with certain materials and after hearing the parties concerned we have come to the conclusion that it is practicable to make a start as regards standardisation of piece-rates, and that is the way in which we propose to make a revision of the existing piece-rates. In the absence of expert assistance, we cannot indeed say that the schemes of standardisation of piece-rates adopted by us must necessarily be perfect, but we are satisfied that these are workable schemes with which we can make a start which is so desirable.

5(2). Before we proceed to set forth the schemes of standardisation of piece-rates with regard to different categories of workers attached to the different departments of a jute mill, it may be useful at this stage to give some short comments regarding the manner in which we have dealt with the schemes submitted by the Indian Jute Mills' Association, and the items in respect of which we have made certain alterations. In setting forth the schemes relating to piece-rates we have followed the arrangement of the departments as shown in the list of occupational nomenclature in Appendix under Issue No. 2. In the Batching Department, we have maintained rate suggested by the Association as regards cutting bale openers and selectors. We have agreed to the same rate for these two categories, although selectors appear to be workers of higher skill, inasmuch as the output of selectors is greater than that of cutting bale openers. As regards the Winding Department, we have adopted the Association's scheme as regards reelers after scrutinising the figures. As regards hessian warp winders we have changed the Association's figure of 3·9 annas per 100 lbs. into 4·2 annas. Similarly, as regards sacking warp winders including dyed yarn winders, we have changed the figure of 3·5 annas per 100 lbs. into 3·6 annas. As regards bundlers, hessian weft winders and sacking weft winders, we have maintained the Association's figures after scrutiny. We have not thought fit to direct any abolition of dyed yarn winders at the present stage, as we find that generally speaking piece-rates are more advantageous for diligent and efficient workers. In the Beaming Department, work is done collectively by the first beamer and other beamers, and the total earnings per machine are divided among the workers, who are generally four and sometimes three in number. On scrutiny we find that the Association's figures with regard to beamers are acceptable, but for slight mistakes which have been corrected. The rate for hessian beaming is 12·5 annas and not 13 annas per 1,000 yards of 400 threads and the rate for sacking beaming is 10·83 annas and not 10·625 annas per 1,000 yards of 400 threads. As regards the Association's figures relating to the Weaving Department, we have made some slight alterations in the rates in consequence of our scrutiny. As regards hessian weaving, we find from the figures of standard production supplied to us by the Association, that the current average standard production is 8·42 cuts of 100 yards laid (=94 yards finished), and not 8·64 cuts as previously suggested by the Association. We have co-ordinated the piece-rates with the standard of basic wages for hessian weavers as shown in Appendix VI under Issue No. 5, and we have come to the conclusion that the rates for the standard fabric for looms of different reed spaces, as suggested by the Association, should be altered. We have accordingly raised the rates of 19·00, 19·87, 20·73, 23·41, 27·40, 33·25 annas per cut to 19·48, 20·37, 21·25, 24·00, 28·00, 34·00 annas per cut respectively. In other respects we have maintained the scheme submitted by the Association. Similarly with regard to the sacking weaving piece-rates (plains), we find from the figures submitted to us by the Association that the current average standard of production is 13·7 cuts and not 13·9 cuts per week. On the basis indicated we have changed the proposed rate of 13·22 annas per cut to 13·41 annas per cut. In other respects we have maintained the Association's scheme regarding sacking weaving piece-rates (plains). As regards sacking weaving piece-rates (twills) we have adopted the same piece-rate as in the case of sacking weaving (plains). In other respects we have maintained the scheme regarding sacking weaving piece-rates (twills) submitted by the Association. As regards hessian and sacking line sardars, no scales of piece-rates need be determined separately as piece-rates applicable to line sardars will depend on a certain percentage of the wages earned by the weavers on the basis of the rates fixed by us. As regards the Finishing Department, piece-rates apply to lapping machine feeders and lapping machine receivers. We do not think there is any sufficient ground for abolishing the system of piece-rates along with time-rates in respect of these categories of workers at the present stage. On scrutinising the figures we have decided to maintain the schemes of piece-rates in respect of lapping machine feeder and lapping machine receivers, as submitted by the Association. Coming to the Sewing Department, we note that in course of the hearing all parties concerned have agreed that helpers as piece-rate workers may be abolished, and this category of workers may be maintained only as time-rate workers. We are of opinion that in consideration of the kind of work done by these helpers in the Sewing Department, there is no need to retain them as piece-rate workers, inasmuch as they are merely coolies and they may very well be paid on the same scale as ordinary coolies on the time-rate basis. We, therefore, direct that the system of helpers as piece-rate workers be abolished, wherever it may exist at present. As regards sewing machine operatives including spliced bag joiners, hemming machine operatives and hand sewers (which expression will include darners and cornering and bundling workers) we have decided, on scrutiny, to adopt the scales of piece-rates proposed by the Association. As regards the Packing Department, piece-rates apply to first pressmen and pressmen, the system being that a group consisting normally of four pressmen including a first pressman works collectively at one machine, and the first pressman usually gets one rupee or so more per week than the other pressmen. On scrutiny we have decided to adopt the schemes of piece-rates proposed by the Association in respect of pressmen including first pressmen.

ISSUE No. 5.—Grades of Wages for Manual Workers and Clerks.

6. We next pass on to consider Issue No. 5 relating to grades of wages for manual workers and clerks. Although the issue speaks of grades of wages, its real purport is standardisation of wages in respect of both manual workers and clerical workers. The expression "grades" has been used in the issue in so far as the Unions representing the workers have pressed for time-scale grades for both manual and clerical workers on the basis of standardisation of wages. Having regard to what we have already said in paragraph 1(11) in the preliminary portion of our award and in paragraph 4(1) under Issue No. 3 relating to Minimum Basic Wages, with reference to the observations of the Royal Commission on Labour in India on pages 215-16 of its Report, we have no doubt that schemes of standardisation of wages should be introduced as far as practicable. The only question is how far we can proceed in the matter of standardisation of wages with regard to different categories of manual workers and also the various types of clerical workers. As regards the manual workers we have not unfortunately been furnished with sufficient data regarding the categories of workers other than those who work in connection with the different processes in the jute textile factory proper including the jute handling department, that is to say, in the departments of Batching, Preparing, Spinning, Winding, Beaming, Weaving, Finishing, Sewing, Packing and Jute Handling. With regard to workers like mill mistris, factory mistris, workers in the General Workshop, members of the boilers and engine room staff, durwans, Gurkha durwans, members of crews of cargo boats, ferry boats and launches, drivers and cleaners of lorries and cars, we find that the rates of wages vary very widely from mill to mill, and we have not been furnished by any of the parties with adequate data on the subject of average wages. In the absence of proper data and in the light of the very wide variations prevailing, we have not been able to arrive at any schemes of standardisation with regard to these categories of manual workers. We shall, therefore, content ourselves with a scheme of increment in wages with regard to them and this scheme we shall give in due course in a later portion of our award under the present issue. With regard to manual workers in the departments of the jute textile factory proper, which we have mentioned above, we have of course decided to introduce a scheme of standardisation.

6(1). The Unions have asked for fixation of time-scale grades for such manual workers. We have given our careful thought to the whole question and have not been able to reconcile ourselves to any idea of fixing time-scale grades for the manual workers referred to. We notice that no time-scale grades for manual workers in the Bombay Cotton Textile Industry have been fixed by the Tribunal concerned. It has not been brought to our notice that time-scale grades with regard to manual workers exist in any comparable industry. In this connection it may be pertinent to refer to the award of Sri K. B. Wassoodew (Retired Judge, High Court) in the matter of the trade dispute between the Mazagaon Dock, Ltd., Bombay, and its employees, as published on page 1721 of the Bombay Government Gazette, dated May 23, 1946. The learned Adjudicator observes in paragraph 15 of the award as follows: "The advantage of having a well graded time-scale with efficiency bar after certain wage levels have been reached, cannot be denied. That conduces to better efficiency and higher standard of work and there is greater incentive to gain skill for obtaining promotion. An automatic rise in wage rates on a pure time-scale basis after a certain period is, in my opinion, harmful both to the employer and to the employee." We may also refer to the award of Dewan Bahadur D. G. Kamerkar, in the matter of the trade dispute between the Cooper Engineering, Ltd., Satara Road, and its employees, as publised on page 3661 of the Bombay Government Gazette, dated December 12, 1946. In paragraph 6 of the award the learned Adjudicator observes as follows: "The first point for determination is whether there should be scales of wages for all categories of workers and, if so, what. The workers insist on a time-scale being fixed providing for a minimum basic wage and the maximum, with certain stated annual increments between the two. The Company declines on the ground that it is neither feasible nor practicable to fix up any time-scale of wages, as the Company is not certain as to what the future prospects of the Engineering Industry can be in the post-war period. It contends that it cannot make any financial commitments without any certain basis for ascertaining whether such additional expenditure can be borne with safety to the sound working of the concern in the years in which such increments might fall due. On a consideration of the grounds urged on either side, I answer this point in the negative. I am much impressed with the argument that in private industrial enterprises automatic promotions by stages are not advisable as such enterprises stand or fall with the efficiency of their workers and efficiency does not necessarily increase among workers with the amount or period of work they put in." We agree generally with the spirit of the observations quoted. In our present case, the Indian Jute Mills' Association has opposed the idea of introduction of time-scale grades for manual workers. After giving careful consideration to all aspects of the question of time-scale grades, in the light of what we have heard during the arguments on both sides and of what we have personally observed with regard to the nature of the work of the different operatives in course of our inspections of some of the jute mills, we do not feel satisfied that the quality of work of an operative, in respect of his skill or practical knowledge or his capacity to apply himself mentally or physically or to exercise responsibility or to bear mental or physical strain, necessarily increases with the progress of time spent in service. Looking at the matter from this point of view and from other angles which should be taken into consideration, we have come to the conclusion that time-scale grades of wages would not be suitable in respect of the manual workers employed in the jute textile factory.

6(2). The question therefore is on what lines we should fix the scale of wages for the different types of manual workers pursuing different occupations. We have already specified the different occupations in the scheme of standardised occupational momenclature as per Appendix. 'a' under Issue No. 2. It is necessary now to consider the basis on which we may fix the standards of basic wages in respect of the different types of workers pursuing these different occupations. We have already determined the minimum basic wages to be Rs.26, as per our award under Issue No. 3. Any scheme of determination of standards of wages in respect of the different types of workers must be based on the minimum basic wages thus determined. With regard to the question of laying down a scheme of standards of wages in respect of the different types of manual workers, we have felt that the appointment of technical assessors was essential. We need not dilate here on the circumstances under which such appointment could not be made, as we have already referred to that subject more than once. The question has arisen as to the manner in which we should differentiate between one type of worker and another in order to determine the difference between the scale of wages appertaining to one type and that applicable to another. In the light of what we have heard in course of the arguments and what we have personally observed in the mills in course of our inspections, we appreciate the position that the difference between the scales of wages applicable to one type of workers and another should depend on the difference between the amounts of skill or practical knowledge, the mental and physical application and attention required, the responsibility and the mental and physical strain involved and other factors which come into play in the actual carrying out of the occupations concerned. In so far as we have not had the advantage of being assisted by the advice of technical assessors we were called upon to apply our own judgment to the question and come to a decision. On the side of the Indian Jute Mills' Association it has been argued that the existing differentials in respect of the varying scales of wages applicable to the different types of workers should be maintained. The Association has submitted statements showing the minimum standard, the maximum standard, and the average standard of wages applicable to each type of worker. The standards of wages vary from mill to mill, but it has been possible to evolve something like an average standard out of the ranges of wages between the minimum and the maximum. The representatives of the Unions have not furnished any separate statements relating to the existing state of things. We have already indicated that it is not practicable to consider the proposed time-scale grades which the Unions incorporated in certain statements presented to us. In the absence of other relevant materials, we have applied our minds to the question as to whether we can adopt the existing differentials, as incorporated in the Association's statements with some modifications, where necessary. At this stage we may state briefly how these differentials have been arrived at. The Association has calculated a figure of existing average wages with regard to each type of worker. From this figure an amount of Rs.17·74 representing the present minimum basic wages (which has been taken to be roughly Rs.18 in connection with Issue No. 3) has been deducted, and the result has been shown as the existing differential applicable to the particular occupation. If the existing differential is maintained, all that is necessary is to add the differential in a particular case to the figure of Rs.26 which we have determined to be the new minimum basic wages as per our award under Issue No. 3. In this way standards of basic wages in respect of the different types of occupations have been arrived at. The question before us is whether there is sufficient justification for adopting the existing differentials arrived at in this manner as proper guides for determining the differences between the scales of wages which should be applicable to the different types of occupations. We realise that a policy of adoption of the existing differentials arrived at in the manner aforesaid is not an ideal policy to adopt. But, as matters stand, under the present circumstances, we must proceed to evolve a scheme of standardisation of wages even with the against inadequate materials placed at our disposal. The existing differentials have come into being as the result of various factors, economic and otherwise, which have come into play through a number of years, and behind these differentials there are elements of some sort of a historical background. In that view of the matter, the idea of adopting these differentials cannot be entirely thrown out of consideration. In the absence of any better materials, the representatives of the Unions also, in the concluding stages of the proceedings, were anxious to see that a scheme of standardisation was arrived at even on the basis of the existing differentials. We have accordingly come to the conclusion that we should adopt, for our present purposes, these figures of existing differentials with slight modifications, where necessary. The scheme of standardisation of basic wages applicable to the manual workers in the departments of Batching, Preparing, Spinning, Winding, Beaming, Weaving, Finishing, Sewing, Packing and Jute Handling, which we have decided upon, is set forth in Appendix VI under the present issue. In formulating this scheme we have adopted the existing differentials shown in the statements submitted by the Indian Jute Mills' Association, with slight modifications, where necessary. We have arrived at figures of basic wages in respect of the different types of workers in the different departments, in terms of rupees per month consisting of 4⅓ weeks or 208 working hours, by pursuing a process of rounding off so as to make each figure correspond to a rate expressed in annas and whole pies per hour. In doing so we have arrived at figures of rupees with decimal fractions which may be converted into rupees, annas and pies as may be necessary.

6(3). It is probable that the standards of basic wages which we have determined with regard to the abovementioned manual workers may have the effect of reducing the existing standards of wages which some workers are now receiving in some individual mills, or, in other words, the standards determined may be lower than the maximum standards of wages which are now being paid in some individual cases. We have applied our minds to the question as to whether we should allow reductions in the scales of wages to take place in cases of this character. It may be that a policy of maintaining such higher levels of wages existing at present would not be quite consistent with a policy of absolute standardisation. On giving our most anxious consideration to the whole subject, we have come to the conclusion that, in the prevailing circumstances, no reductions should be allowed to take place. In this connection we may usefully refer to the observations made by Issacs J. in a decision reported in the case King vs. Whyprow and Co. and others, 11 Commonwealth Law Reports (1910-11), page 1 at page 61. The learned Judge makes following observations: "The Court has no greater jurisdiction to award a higher wage than was asked, than it has to reduce wages below what were actually in dispute. There is nothing in the world to prevent employers and employees from making their respective demands as wide as they please; but then they choose to select one particular limited demand as the subject or point of dispute, and refer that to the Court, then that is what the Court has to decide. It may be anything between the maximum and the minimum limits of the dispute, but it can pass neither further forward than the maximum nor further back than the minimum." We agree generally with the principle enunciated in these observations, and we have decided that no reductions in respect of the existing scales of wages should be allowed to take place by virtue of the scheme of standardisation which we have set forth in Appendix VI under the present issue.

6(4). With regard to the manual workers in the different departmen' ae mentioned in Appendix VI, we give the following directions. Subject t es our directions with regard to the basic wages of manual workers in th ex Prabartak Jute Mills under Issue No. 29, we direct that the scheme of ba be wages as per Appendix VI shall apply to the workers concerned in the ittee mills involved in this reference. This direction, however, shall be sul ave to the proviso that in no case should the existing standard of basic wages no respect of a particular worker or category of workers in any particular mills be reduced by virtue of application of the scheme. In other words we direct that in any particular case where the scheme set forth by us may have the effect of reducing the existing scale of basic wages, such existing scale shall be maintained. In a particular case where the existing scale of basic wages happens to be greater than the standardised scale determined by us, the amount of excess of the existing scale over the standardised scale may be called "additional basic wages" in respect of the individual worker concerned. Such "additional basic wages" shall count as "basic wages" for all purposes, such as, provident fund, gratuity, leave, payment for involuntary unemployment, etc. We further direct that where there is a combination of standardised occupations in respect of one worker, the basic wages applicable to the highest paid occupation shall be paid to him.

6(5). We may now take up the case of manual workers other than the types of workers mentioned in Appendix VI. Such manual workers are mill mistris, factory mistris, workers in the General Workshop, members of the boilers and engine room staff, durwans, Gurkha durwans, members of crews of cargo boats, ferry boats and launches, drivers and cleaners of lorries and cars. The different types of workers under these categories have been set forth in Appendiv IV under Issue No. 2 showing the scheme of standardised occupational nomenclature which we have determined. As we have already indicated, it has not been practicable for us to arrive at any scheme of standardisation of basic wages in respect of these categories of manual workers. We are, however, of opinion that increments in the existing scales of wages with regard to these workers should be effected to a reasonable extent, and to that end we have formulated a scheme, which shall apply to all manual workers other than those who have been incorporated in Appendix VI under the present issue. We direct that, subject to the directions, given by us in connection with manual workers in the Prabartak Jute Mills under Issue No. 29, the following scheme shall apply to all such manual workers in the jute mills involved in this reference:—

(a) Manual workers getting basic wages up to Rs. 45 per month shall get an increase of 18¾ per cent. or of 3 annas in the rupee, subject to a minimum of Rs. 26 per month.

(b) Manual workers getting basic wages above Rs. 45 and up to Rs. 75 per month shall get an increase of 12½ per cent. or of 2 annas in the rupee, subject to a minimum of Rs. 54 per month.

(c) Manual workers getting basic wages over Rs. 75 per month shall get an increase of 6¼ per cent. or of 1 anna in the rupee, subject to a minimum of Rs. 85.

6(6). In case there has been any omission to mention any particular type of manual worker in connection with the abovementioned scheme or with the scheme set forth in Appendix VI under the present issue, the basic wages in respect of such manual worker shall be determined by the employer concerned consistently with the principles enunciated above.

6(7). We now come to the question of determining standardised scales of basic wages for clerks or clerical workers who may be employed either in the factory proper, or in the office or elsewhere. As already indicated we have not had adequate information on the subject of wages of the clerical staff in the different mills. It appears however from the statements submitted by the Union concerned in connection with the clerical staff employed in the Ganges Jute Mills at Bansberia that the lowest grade of wages paid to clerks in that particular concern is Rs. 27 to Rs. 35 per month. It is understood that generally speaking the lowest grade applicable to the clerical staff is in the neighbourhood of Rs. 40 to Rs. 60 per month. As we have already observed in connection with the question of fixation of minimum basic wages under Issue No. 3, such existing scales of wages applicable to clerical workers are much too small in view of the existing conditions of life. There is no manner of doubt that the scales of basic wages applicable to clerks should be reasonably increased. As regards the fixation of time-scale grades, the case of clerks stands on a footing which is somewhat different from that of the manual workers. It is usual for clerical workers to be put on time-scale grades of wages in the different establishments in the country. There is therefore no reason why time-scale grades should not be fixed by us, at least in respect of the lower grades of clerical workers. It appears that the scales of wages applicable to higher or special grade clerks vary very widely from mill to mill, and in view of the widely different conditions prevailing in the different establishments, it is not practicable to fix definite time-scale grades for the higher or special grade clerks. We have come to the conclusion that the question of basic wages and grades for higher or special grade clerks should be left to the discretion of the individual employers in the different jute mills. It is however necessary to standardise the basic wages in the form of time-scale grades in respect of the lower grade clerical staff employed in the different mills. We are fixing only two grades for such lower grade clerks. Subject to our directions in connection with clerical workers in the Prabartak Jute Mills under Issue No. 29, we direct that the following scheme with regard to clerical workers employed in the factory, or in the office, or elsewhere in a jute mill shall apply to the jute mills involved in this reference:—

Lower grade clerical workers shall be put in the two following time-scale grades, the first figure in each grade representing the minimum starting monthly wages, the last figures representing the maximum monthly wages, and the middle figure representing the amount of increment per year of service:—

Grade I—Rs. 70—4—130.

Grade II—Rs. 55—3—85.

Clerical workers including new entrants who are graduates, shall be placed in Grade I. Non-Graduate clerical workers shall ordinarily be placed in Grade II, but there will be no bar to placing such clerical workers in Grade I, and suitable and efficient non-graduate clerical workers may be placed in Grade I. As regards the question of fitting the clerical workers on existing lower scales of basic wages into the grades of basic wages now fixed by our award, the following scheme shall be observed. Subject to our directions, it will be at the discretion of the employer concerned to determine the grade applicable to a particular clerical worker. When a clerical worker on an existing lower scale of wages is brought on to the corresponding scale as determined by us, his initial wages should be fixed at the stage in the new scale which is equal to or next above the scale he is drawing at present, and to this should be added special increments at the rate of one increment in the new scale for every three completed years of service. The figure thus obtained shall be the scale of basic wages applicable to that particular clerical worker. In no case shall a clerical worker be placed in a grade less favourable to him than the existing grade and terms of service.

If in any concern the amount of wages of any workman is a consolidated sum consisting of basic wages, dearness allowance and other allowances:—

(1) a sum of Rs. 32-8, where no food concession benefits are availabl to the workman concerned, or

(2) a sum of Rs. 23-13-3 where such benefits to the extent of Rs. 2 more per week are available, or

(3) a sum of Rs. 32-8 diminished by the value of food conces benefits where such benefits are less than Rs. 2 per week in v shall be deducted from the consolidated wages to find out basic wages, as distinguished from the dearness allowance in the context of this award. The basic wages thus found shall be treated in accordance with the scheme of this award to find out the new scale of basic wages for the particular workman under this award.

ISSUE No. 6.—Revision of Dearness Allowance.

7. The next subject for our consideration is that of revision of dearness allowance under Issue No. 6. It will be remembered that in our award under Issue No. 3 relating to fixation of minimum basic wages, we have come to the conclusion that the minimum total emolument of the lowest paid manual worker should be Rs. 58-8 per month and out of that amount Rs. 32-8 should go towards the dearness allowance. This dearness allowance will consist of two items, namely, (1) the dearness allowance proper, and (2) the value of food concessions allowed. As regards the distribution of the entire amount of dearness allowance between these two items, we shall deal with the matter later on. It is necessary in the beginning to consider whether dearness allowance should be fixed for various categories of workers on the basis of different ranges of wages and whether it should be on a sliding scale depending on the varying cost of living index figures. Taking the latter aspect first, we may recall what we have already said under Issue No. 3 with regard to the cost of living index figures available in West Bengal. We have already indicated that there is no really authorised version of the cost of living index figures in this Province, and we have found ourselves unable to act upon the different versions which have reached us. Apart from this aspect of the matter, we think that fixation of dearness allowance at a flat rate would be the most suitable policy for our purposes. In fact the Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has stated in its written statement that dearness allowance should be allowed at a flat rate, and most of the other Unions also mentioned a flat figure for dearness allowance. Our award will not remain in force for more than one year. Although it may be that the cost of living index may vary by way of rises or falls during that period, we are of opinion that it would be most convenient for the purpose of all concerned if we fix the scale of dearness allowance at a flat rate, irrespective of the cost of living index figures. Then we may turn our attention to the aspect of varying ranges of wages. Here again, after giving the most careful thought to all points of view, we have come to the conclusion that for our present purposes there need not be a sliding scale of dearness allowance depending on varying ranges of wages, and we have decided to fix the amount of dearness allowance for all workmen, either manual or clerical, at a flat rate of Rs. 32-8 per month, inclusive of the value of food concessions, irrespective of all other considerations. This will mean a rise in the scale of dearness allowance to the extent of about Rs. 4-8 per month, in so far as the existing scale of dearness allowance is roughly Rs. 28 per month in respect of manual workers. Unfortunately figures in respect of clerical workers in all concerns with regard to this subject were not made available to us. In our opinion, if the scale of dearness allowance applicable at present to any workman of any category is greater than Rs. 32-8 per month inclusive of the value of food concessions, such existing scale should be maintained, as we have decided not to reduce any existing scale. With regard to the question of dearness allowance, we have decided to make an exception in the case of the Prabartak Jute Mills, as will appear in our award under Issue No. 29. Our award under the present issue in respect of dearness allowance will apply to the workmen in all the mills except the Prabartak Jute Mills. Subject to this reservation, we direct that the scale of dearness allowance inclusive of the value of food concessions, in respect of all categories of workmen, be fixed at Rs. 32-8 per month. This direction will be subject to the proviso that in a particular case in which the existing scale of dearness allowance is greater than the scale of Rs. 32-8 per month which is now fixed, the existing scale shall be maintained.

7(1). Then comes the question of distributing the total amount of dearness allowance, i.e., Rs. 32-8 between the items of (1) dearness allowance proper, and (2) the value of food concessions. We have ascertained that the following ingredients of food are ordinarily supplied at concession rates to the workmen every week on condition that the concession for the whole week is to be allowed to the workman who attends and works at least for one day in the week. The ingredients of food supplied per week are as follows:—

Cereals, i.e., rice, atta, gram and dal, to the extent of at least 5 seers in all.

Mustard oil—½ seer.

Extra dal—1 seer.

It appears that the average value of food concession thus allowed is about Rs. 2 per week, or Rs. 8-10-9 per month consisting of 4⅓ weeks. When prices rise the employer takes upon himself the extra burden, and when prices fall the employer has to pay less for the food materials supplied. The present trend is towards rise, and it is therefore more beneficial to the workmen to purchase their food materials at concession prices from the mill ration shops. On behalf of the Unions it was contended that the mill ration shops should be abolished in so far as they were being run very unsatisfactorily, the quality of food materials supplied being very bad, and the weights being short, and the management on the whole not being up to the mark. Complaints were made that the administration of food materials was left in many places in the hands of contractors. This allegation however was denied on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association. On giving careful thought to the whole question we have come to the conclusion that the system of food ration shops wherefrom workers can draw their food rations at fixed concession prices, irrespective of the rise and fall of prices in the ordinary market or in the recognised food ration shops outside, is beneficial to both the employers and employees and we agree with the view expressed on behalf of the Association that this system acts as a convenient buffer against the rise and fall of prices. We, therefore, hold that the system of food ration shops in the mills should be maintained as far as practicable. The abuses said to be prevalent in the administration of the mill ration shops should however be eliminated, and steps must be taken to get rid of contractors where they exist, and to place the entire administration under responsible officers of the employers themselves, and care should be taken to see that the quality of the food materials supplied is not bad and the weights are correct. We have given careful consideration to the contention of the Unions that the mill ration shops should be done away with, and the workmen should be given the cash value of the food concessions instead. The Unions have also claimed that the value of the food concessions should vary with the fluctuations in the prices of the food materials. We are of opinion that efforts should be made to convince the workmen that the food ration shops exist for their benefit and subject to a proper standard of administration of these shops, there should be no ground for abolishing the mill ration shops. We are not satisfied that the demand for abolishing the mill ration shops is really universal. At the same time we are satisfied that there may be a genuine demand for such abolition in individual mills. While we recommended that the system of mill ration shops should be maintained in the interest of the workmen themselves, we are not disposed to compel them to accept the system, and we hold that if a substantial majority of the workmen of all categories in a particular concern demands that the system of food ration shop in the mill should be substituted by a system of payment of the cash value of the food concessions, such a demand should be respected in the interest of industrial peace. In a particular case in which the majority of the workmen, to the extent determined by us, demands the cash value of the food concessions, such cash value shall be fixed at Rs.2 per week or Rs.8-10-9 per month consisting of 4⅓ weeks. Thus the total dearness allowance of Rs. 32-8 will consist of Rs.23-13-3 (at Rs.5-8 per week of 48 hours or 1 anna 10 pies per hour for manual workmen) as dearness allowance proper and Rs. 8-10-9 as value of food concessions. The dearness allowance proper should be linked with attendance as at present, and the food concessions either by way of actual supply of food at concession rates from the mill ration shops or by way of payment of the cash value as determined above will depend on the factor of the particular workmen attending and working at least for one day in the week, as at present. We accordingly give the following directions, subject to a special direction under Issue No. 29 in respect of the Prabartak Jute Mills:—

(1) The dearness allowance in respect of all categories of workmen, both manual and clerical, shall be fixed at Rs. 32-8 per month inclusive of the value of food concessions to the extent of Rs. 8-10-9 per month, the dearness allowance proper thus being Rs. 23-13-3 per month.

(2) The dearness allowance proper shall be linked with attendance.

(3) The food concessions will depend on the condition that the workman shall attend and work at least for one day in the week.

(4) The quantity of food materials supplied at present, as noted in an earlier part of our award under this issue, shall be maintained.

(5) Food ration shops shall be maintained by the different jute mills, unless a majority of at least 75 per cent. of the workmen in any mill express their desire to receive the cash value of the food concessions. Once the choice is made the workmen will not be permitted to resile from it during the period of operation of this Award.

(6) In case the option is exercised in favour of receiving the cash value of food concessions instead of drawing food materials from the mill ration shops at concession rates, the cash value to be given on this account to each workman shall be the fixed amount of Rs. 8-10-9 per month, which along with the dearness allowance proper to the extent of Rs. 23-13-3 will make up the total dearness allowance of Rs. 32-8.

(7) In a particular case in which the amount of dearness allowance prevailing at present in the form of amenity allowance or any other benefit, exceeds the scale of Rs. 32-8 per month for dearness allowance which we have now fixed, the existing scale shall be maintained.

ISSUE No. 7.—Bonus for Past Years and for the Future.

Profit-sharing bonus.

8. We next take up the question of bonus (1) for past years and (2) for the future. The demand for bonus for the future, as put forward by the different Unions, involves the question of profit-sharing bonus, whereas the demand for bonus for past years is based on the proposition that the workmen are entitled to be compensated out of the alleged huge profits which were made by the different jute mills during the past years, and particularly the years of war. At the very outset the claim for bonus in any shape or form has been resisted very strenuously by the Indian Jute Mills Association on behalf of all the jute mills with which we are concerned, on the footing that this claim is not an industrial dispute at all, and this Tribunal has no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. Before we proceed to deal with the legal aspect of the issue, let us state briefly the nature of the claim put forward by the different Unions. The Indian Jute Mill Workers' Federation has demanded a bonus to the extent of 2 months' wages for each year from 1937 to 1946, and also a profit-sharing bonus [illegible] subsequent years, according to some scheme more or less like the scheme [illegible]ned by the Tata Iron and Steel Co., Ltd., at Jamshedpur and it is [illegible]nded that the employers should pay to the workmen 22½ per cent. of [illegible] income after deducting for legitimate depreciation and providing [illegible] per cent. dividend, the share of profits thus available being distributed [illegible] workmen on a pro-rata basis of basic wages. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour has demanded at least 3 months' wages as bonus to compensate the losses incurred and to get rid of the indebtedness due to employment in the jute mills, and has also demanded profit-sharing bonus to the extent of 25 per cent. of the gross profits to be distributed among the workmen. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has claimed immediate payment of 3 months' wages including allowances to all manual workers and clerks and also, so far as the future is concerned, 25 per cent. of the annual gross profits to be distributed among the manual workers or clerks as a profit-sharing bonus every year. The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union has asked for bonus to the extent of 3 months' wages as compensation for loss in real wages during the war years and profit-sharing bonus to the extent of 25 per cent. of the annual gross profits. The Bansberia Jute Mill Employees' Union has claimed bonus to the extent of 3 months' pay for every year. The minimum demand in respect of bonus for past years, therefore, comes to 3 months' wages, and the demand for bonus for future years is really in respect of what is being called profit-sharing bonus.

8(1). Before we proceed to discuss the claims put forward by the Unions we are confronted with the contention of the Indian Jute Mills Association to the effect that this Tribunal has no jurisdiction to deal with the subject in so far as it is not an industrial dispute. Sri M. P. Birla, Chairman of the Indian Jute Mills Association, in his address to the Tribunal on the 7th June 1948, observed as follows: "I agree that the question of bonus beng an ex-gratia payment is an exploded theory according to recent awards and judgments". The Chairman of the Association, while conceding the position to that extent, did not say that the Association decided to give up the controversy regarding the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. Prior to the Chairman's address before us we had occasion to hear elaborate arguments put forward by Sri S. Chaudhuri, Counsel for the Association, in support of the proposition that the claim relating to bonus was not an industrial dispute at all, in so far as it was an ex-gratia payment and it could not be incorporated in the terms of employment. We also heard Sri S. K. Basu, Advocate, on behalf of the Indian Jute Mill Workers' Federation in support of the contrary view. We are, therefore, called upon to decide whether we have jurisdiction to deal with this issue before we can proceed any further. We note that the Chairman of this Tribunal had occasion to give a decision on the same subject in connection with Issue No. 7 in his award in the industrial dispute between the Bengal Chemical and Pharmaceutical Works, Ltd., and its employees, as published by the Government of West Bengal, Department of Commerce, Labour and Industries, order No. 756Lab., dated the 5th November 1947, in the Calcutta Gazette. We agree generally with the view expressed by the Adjudicator in that award which is expressed in the following manner. "The first question is whether this Tribunal has jurisdiction to adjudicate on this matter, or in other words, whether it comes within the purview of an 'industrial dispute' as defined in section 2(k) of the Industrial Disputes Act, which lays down that an 'industrial dispute' means any dispute between employers and workmen, which is connected with the employment or non-employment or the terms of employment or with the conditions of labour of any person. It has been contended on behalf of the Company that 'bonus' is a gift or ex-gratia payment and [illegible] entirely a matter of grace and does not form any of the existing term[illegible] employment and therefore cannot be the subject-matter of an ind[illegible] dispute. On giving very careful consideration to this contention, I [illegible] opinion that 'bonus' when demanded by the employees and refus[illegible] employers becomes a subject-matter of an industrial dispute ir[illegible] such a dispute is connected with the terms of employment, though the subject-matter does not in fact constitute one of the existing terms of employment. In my opinion, the subject-matter of the dispute need not be one of the existing terms of employment at all, and it will be sufficient if the controversy between the parties relates to a subject which according to either party may or should be a term of employment. The connection between the dispute and the terms of employment is established as soon as the employees demand that the subject-matter is or should be a term of employment and the employers resist by contending that it is not, or should not be, or cannot be, a term of employment. The same type of argument applies to the expression 'conditions of labour', and the dispute, in order to be an industrial dispute, is not restricted to merely the existing conditions of labour, but may be extended to what should have been the conditions of labour. Unless the words are interpreted in this liberal manner, the position would be ridiculous, as a Tribunal would be debarred from considering the question of housing as a condition of labour where it does not exist at present or the question of dearness allowance or compensatory allowance or any allowance of a special character where it does not prevail at the moment."

8(2). The view expressed above finds complete support in the judgments of the Bombay High Court in the case of Indian Hume Pipe Co., Ltd., reported in XLVIII Bombay Law Reporter, page 551 (also in All-India Reporter, 1947, Bombay, page 42). In the original Court presided over by Bhagwati J., the petitioners, the Indian Hume Pipe Co., Ltd., were the owners of a factory where they employed a certain number of workmen, who were represented by a Union called the "Hume Pipe Workers' Union". Prior to 1944 the Union demanded the payment of bonus from the petitioners, and as a result of negotiations or conciliation proceedings, the petitioners paid certain amounts of bonus agreed upon. Bonus was similarly demanded for the year 1944, but the claim was refused. The Union sent a notice to the effect that if the claim was not conceded within a certain period the workmen would go on strike. The Government of Bombay eventually referred the matter to an adjudicator for adjudication. The petitioners took the matter to the High Court for restraining the adjudicator from proceeding further with the adjudication, and the contention was that the payment of bonus was a voluntary payment ex-gratia and by way of concession which the petitioners were not bound to pay to the workmen under the terms of their employment as part of the wages payable to the workmen by the petitioners, and that the workmen were not entitled to claim any bonus as of right or as part of their wages, and the dispute not being a trade dispute could not be referred for adjudication under Rule 81A(1)(c) of the Defence of India Rules, 1939. It is needless for us to go elaborately into the details of the judgment passed by Bhagwati J., but it will be useful to refer to relevant passages from the judgment which we consider to be important. We agree that the authorities referred to in the judgment establish beyond doubt the proposition enunciated by Lord Birkenhead, in the case of Sutton vs. Attorney-General (1923)39T.L.R.294(297), that the term "bonus" is used not only to describe the payments made of grace and not as of right, but also includes payments made because they are legally due. We also agree that a question as to whether the workmen should be given a bonus for a particular year is, if it is not merely an ex-gratia payment, clearly a term express or implied, of the contract of employment. In this connection reference has been made in the judgment of Bhagwati J., to the English decision in the House of Lords in the case of National Association of Local Government Officers vs. Boltan Corporation (1943 Appeal cases 166). We may usefully refer to the observations of Lord Atkin on pages 180-81 of the Report, which run as follows: "I come to the conclusion , therefore, that the local authorities are given the power to make it part of the terms of employment of their servants that they will exercise their power of making up the war service pay when the servants leave their employment, and if there be such a power there is nothing to prevent the servants from claiming to have the power exercised, and if a difference arises in this matter between the authority and the servants there is nothing to prevent the Minister from referring the difference to the National Arbitration Tribunal, or to prevent that Tribunal from determining the dispute. It is unnecessary to say that the Tribunal has complete control on the matter. It may reject the claim altogether or it may grant it in part or subject to conditions. The interference of the rights of the employers is no more or no less than the interference when any question of wages is referred to compulsory arbitration." We may similarly quote from the speech of Lord Wright at page 189, which runs as follows: "I cannot see any good reason why the respondents should not agree in advance to make a condition of employment with their employees generally that this would be done. Nor can I see why, if the employees insist on that condition and the respondents refuse it, there is not a trade dispute under the order or why the Tribunal has not jurisdiction to make a binding award." After considering these views expressed in the Boltan Corporation Case, Bhagwati J., comes to the following conclusions: "I am of opinion that if a dispute which has arisen between the employers and the workmen is such as can be said to be connected with the terms of employment, express or implied, even though the employer may, apart from entering into any such contract of employment, also have the power to make an ex-gratia payment, it would be open to the workmen to contend that the payment demanded by the workmen was not a payment ex-gratia but was a payment which could be comprised within the terms of employment, express or implied, obtainning between the employer and the workmen. * * * I am of opinion that it would be open to the workmen to contend that the payment demanded by the workmen from the employer was a payment as of right; a payment which could be made by the employer not as a matter of grace but as extra remuneration for the work done by the employees under a contract, express or implied, and if a demand was made by the workmen for such payment from the employer and the employer refused to make such payment, there would arise a trade dispute between the employer and the workmen within the meaning of section 2(j) of the Trade Disputes Act." This view held by Bhagwati J., in the original Court was upheld on appeal by the Court of Appeal consisting of Stone C. J. and Kania J. Some of the observations made by Chief Justice Stone in course of his judgment are as follows: "In my judgment as soon as the appellant company refused to comply with this demand which it was in its unfettered discretion to grant, it is quite impossible to say that there was no dispute or difference between the employers and their workmen which was connected with the terms of employment. * * * Even accepting that the primary meaning of the word 'bonus' is 'gift' or 'gratuity', it is not asked in this case as a matter of patronage or bounty. It is demanded, and strike action is threatened if such demand is not complied with. So that as soon as the demand is declined, all the elements of a trade dispute arise." Similarly some of the observations made by Kania J., are as follows: "While the appellants contend that it is an ex-gratia payment, respondents contend that it is not so. The appellants contend that the workmen are not entitled under the terms of their employment to the same, while the respondents contend that it is not so. If so, in my opinion, it is clearly a dispute between the parties as regards the terms of employment and is covered by section 3 of the Trade Disputes Act". The question before us is whether the dispute relating to the claim for bonus is an industrial dispute within the meaning of section 2(k) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. The claim as put forward by the Unions on behalf of the workmen employed in the jute mills is clearly not in respect of an ex-gratia payment, and the claim is made as a matter of right on the footing that even though such a term regarding payment of bonus is not one of the existing terms of employment, it should be one of the terms of employment, and the prayer before this Tribunal is that the payment of bonus on such conditions as it thinks fit should be compulsorily made one of the terms of employment. In the arguments advanced before us there was a good deal of discussion on both sides as to whether bonus of the kind claimed would be "wages" within the meaning of section 2(vi) of the Payment of Wages Act. We do not think that the kind of bonus claimed would be "wages" within the meaning of the Payment of Wages Act, and we are of opinion that the only question before us, irrespective of all other considerations, is whether the claim for bonus which has been put forward on behalf of the workmen and which has been resisted on behalf of the employers is a dispute between the employers and the workmen which is connected with the terms of employment or in other words whether this dispute is an industrial dispute. After giving very careful consideration to all aspects of the subject, we come to the clear conclusion that this dispute is an industrial dispute, and this Tribunal has ample jurisdiction to deal with it.

8(3). The real question before us is how we shall deal with this matter and whether we shall make an award in respect of the claim for bonus under the particular circumstances. We shall first deal with the claim for bonus to the extent of 3 months' wages or more in respect of the past years up to 1946. The main ground on which this claim is made is that the jute mills made huge profits during the past years, particularly the years of war, and the workmen were deprived of their just dues in so far as they were not given any share of those huge profits, and were allowed to run into debts or to incur losses generally. Unfortunately, the Unions have not placed any figures indicating the alleged huge profits during the past years. In Sri S. R. Deshpande's Report on an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India, on page 5, we find a table giving figures regarding the profits made by the Jute Textile Industry during the period 1928 to 1942. It is not clear whether the number of companies mentioned in the table represented the entire industry, although the language used seems to mean that the figures of profits given represent the profits made by the entire industry. In this table we do not find any huge profits against the years 1937, 1938 or 1939. It appears that profits began to increase from the year 1940 after the war commenced. Even then it is not clear that the profits as shown in the figures can be described as huge or abnormal profits. Sri M. P. Birla, Chairman of the Indian Jute Mills Association, in course of his address before this Tribunal submitted a statement of gross and net profits made by the industry during the years 1933 to 1947, the figures given representing 90 per cent. of the Association on loomage basis. In the table submitted it is shown that there were losses, and no profits, in the industry in 1937 and 1938 and the net profits during the years 1940 to 1946 ranged from 189 lakhs to 322 lakhs of rupees. We notice that the figures of profits given in Sri M. P, Birla's statement and those given on page 5 of Sri S. R. Deshpande's book do not tally with each other. The question for our consideration is whether any such abnormal profits were made by the industry during the past few years as would justify our making an order of compulsory payment of bonus in respect of those years. We find the following significant observations on page 5 of Deshpande's Report: "It will be seen that as a result of the conditions created by the war the industry has not made abnormal profits like certain other industries in the country, and although the profit position is better than in the period of depression, it is not better than what it was prior to 1929. As stated by the Chairman of the Indian Jute Mills Association, one of the reasons for this is that although there has been great demand for jute manufactures, prices had to be kept at reasonable level as the prosperity depends to a large extent on the export markets and after the outbreak of the war, the main consumers of the industry, namely, the Government of India, the United States of America and the other allied Governments, made it plain that the industry should not charge them any unduly high prices. It was stated that the percentage of profit earned from orders directly placed by Government was only 7½." The position is that the different units in the industry have already paid the taxes payable to Government in respect of such profits as were found to have been made, and if we made any award directing the employers to pay amounts of bonus in respect of the past years at this stage, the employers would probably not get any benefit of deductions on account of the bonus which may be paid at this distance of time. Apart from the element of unfairness which would be involved in an order of the kind sought by the Unions, we feel that it is difficult to be satisfied on the materials available to us that abnormal profits were actually made by the different mills during the past years. Moreover it would not be fair to saddle the entire industry in a lump with a liability regarding payment of bonus for past years, without our being able to consider the amounts of profits made by individual units, particularly the marginal units. As we have said, in the absence of adequate data we are unable to come to the conclusion that any abnormal profits were made during the past years by the different jute mills in West Bengal. In the result, we are not disposed to make an award directing payment of bonus in respect of past years.

8(4). We then proceed to take up the question of bonus for years subsequent to 1946, or in other words the question of profit-sharing bonus. On behalf of the Unions it is contended that the introduction of a scheme of profit-sharing bonus, more or less on the lines of the scheme adopted by the Tata Iron and Steel Co., Ltd., will be an incentive to the employees for exerting themselves to the utmost, in so far as such a scheme of participation in the profits of the establishment will naturally make them interested directly in its prosperity, and such a scheme is likely to increase the production. We feel that there is a good deal to be said in support of the idea involved in the claim put forward by the Unions. At the same time our attention has been drawn on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills Association to various other factors which should be taken into consideration before any decision can be arrived at. It has been contended on behalf of the Association that the Jute Textile Industry consisting of a large number of units of varying degrees of efficiency and prosperity is essentially different from a single industrial unit like the Tata Iron and Steel Co. It is pointed out that the circumstances through which the Tata Iron and Steel Co. has passed through different stages of its development are essentially different from those which have prevailed in the Jute Textile Industry. In view of what we are going to say later on, it is needless for us to go into the minute details of the distinction between a single unit like the Tata Iron and Steel Co. and the large number of units comprising the Jute Textile Industry. Our attention has been drawn to the fact that while the Jute Textile Industry is an export industry with its market mostly in foreign countries, other industries, such as those of iron and steel, cotton, sugar, etc., have their markets confined practically within this country. That being the position, it is pointed out, the products of the Jute Textile Industry in this country have got to compete not only with jute textile products of other foreign countries, but also with substitutes for jute bags, such as paper or cloth containers. It also appears that since after the partition of this country raw jute is grown mostly in Pakistan which is a foreign country, and this raw material is not so easily available as it used to be when the Indian sub-continent was one country and apart from the position that the availability of raw jute depends on such arrangement as may be made with the Government of Pakistan, the raw commodity is being subjected to a duty in accordance with the decision of the Pakistan Government. While we must say that we have not had sufficient opportunity of examining with thoroughness these different aspects of difficulties surrounding the Jute Textile Industry as a whole in this country, we are of opinion that these factors deserve the closest examination by experts, whose aid has not unfortunately been available to us. Then there are several other matters to be taken into consideration and we feel that before one can arrive at any conclusion as to the desirability or otherwise of introducing a profit-sharing scheme, it will be necessary to examine all those matters with the greatest care. The object of the proposed introduction of a profit-sharing scheme is to establish industrial peace in so far as such a scheme is likely to be conducive to the benefit of the employees, and to produce an atmosphere of contentment. One question is whether it will in fact give rise to contentment or is likely to introduce new causes of discontent. The accrual of profits in a particular industrial unit certainly depends in part on the effort put in by the workmen. But the effort of the workmen by itself is not the whole thing, and it cannot be gainsaid that the accrual of profits depends simultaneously on certain other factors, such as, efficiency of the management, managerial policy, trade conditions, etc. It is not improbable that a particular unit where the workmen are highly efficient and are contributing the greatest amount of effort in the cause of production may not be deriving substantial profits or perhaps may be incurring losses because of the influence of the other factors which may be on a low level. Thus it may happen that a band of efficient and sincere workmen in a particular unit may not be deriving any tangible benefit from a profit-sharing scheme, and in another unit where the workmen may not be exerting themselves with sincerity and, efficiency, substantial profits may accrue because of favourable circumstances arising from the other factors which collectively contribute to the accrual of profits. If this kind of thing happens bringing into prominence the difference between one unit and another, the question arises whether it will lead to discontent in the minds of sincere but disappointed workmen. We have discussed this aspect in order to bring out the position that the factors at work in different units in the industry may be so widely divergent, that the question of accrual of profits will be demonstrated not to depend merely on the sincerity and efficiency of the workmen. Apart from these likely differences between one unit and another, the circumstances surrounding the question of accrual of profits may vary substantially in the same unit from one year to another. With regard to this latter aspect the question arises whether the workmen in the same unit, with their ordinary matter-of-fact psychology, will be able to bear with complacency the position that they will get the chance of participating in the profits in one year, while in another year they will get nothing at all, and whether circumstances of this kind will be conducive to contentment and industrial peace or will give rise to fresh causes of friction and discontent. Then we have to consider a practical question of the method of equitable distribution of the profits among the different interests. After giving the most careful consideration to this very important aspect of the subject, we feel that it is not practicable to come to a conclusion regarding the proper method to be adopted without getting the aid of experts whose advice is likely to be of immense value, and it is not safe to commit ourselves to a policy of blind imitation of the profit-sharing scheme adopted by the Tata Iron and Steel Co. or by any other concern, without our having got the chance of weighing all the implications of such a scheme relating particularly to the subject of equitable distribution of the earnings of an establishment."

8(5). Having set forth above the different aspects which, we feel, must be closely examined before a conclusion is arrived at, we would like to take notice, at this stage, of the fact that in pursuance of the decisions arrived at in the Tripartite Industries Conference held in New Delhi in December 1947 and of the Government Resolution, dated the 6th April 1948, on industrial policy, the Government of India has set up an Expert Committee to study and report on the determination of fair wages to labour and fair return on capital, and allied matters. It is understood that this step has been taken as a preliminary to the appointment of a Central Advisory Council on industries. It will be useful to set forth here the Government of India Resolution defining the functions of the Expert Committee, which was published in May 1948. The main features of the text of the Government of India Resolution announcing the functions of the Central Advisory Council and of the Expert Committee are on the following lines. The main function of the Central Advisory Council will be to advise Government on the principles to be followed for the determination of—

(a) fair wages to labour,

(b) fair return on capital employed in the industry,

(c) reasonable reserves for the maintenance and expansion of the undertaking, and

(d) labour's share of the surplus profits calculated on a sliding scale normally varying with production after provision has been made for (b) and (c) above.

The Government of India agree with the view expressed at the recent Labour Conference that subjects (b), (c) and (d) are of such a complex nature as to require preliminary study by experts in order to facilitate detailed consideration by the Central Advisory Council. They have accordingly decided to appoint a Committee of Experts. The Committee, it appears, will have to pay particular attention to the following points:—

(1) How should capital employed in the industry be determined?

(2) How should depreciation and taxation be treated for the purpose of arriving at the gross profit to be allocated between capital, labour and reserves?

(3) What are the purposes for which provision should be made by way of reserves and what should be the extent of such reserves?

(4) What should be a fair return on capital employed in the industry? Should it be at a uniform rate for all industries or should the rate vary from industry to industry, and if so, on what principles? If the fair return is not reached in some years, should provision be made for making it up later and if so, how? (NOTE.—The fair return should be such as not to discourage adequate investment.)

(5) Should the fair return on capital employed in an industry vary with the level of taxation if the industry is a joint stock company or a private company?

(6) How should labour's share of the surplus profits (after making provision for fair return on capital and reasonable reserves) be determined on a sliding scale normally varying with production?

(7) Should surplus profits be shared every year or should a part be held in reserve for equalisation or any other purpose such as provision against past and future losses?

(8) How should labour's share of the distributable profits, as determined under (6) and (7) above be distributed, that is, whether by each undertaking or by each industry or by industry as a whole in each region or for all industrial undertakings in the country or by a combination of these methods?

(9) How should Government undertakings be treated for (1) to (8) above?

(10) What should be the nature of the machinery for the determination of fair return, etc., on the principles accepted by Government?

(11) If, in the light of the considerations mentioned above, profit-sharing appears impracticable, what, if any, are the alternatives available to give effect to the principles underlying Government's declared policy? It appears from a note, dated the 2nd August, 1948, published in the newspapers that the latest phase of the policy of the Government of India with regard to this matter is on the following lines: Profit-sharing on an experimental basis for a specified period of time in a selected section of industry has been proposed by the Committee on profit-sharing. The Committee's proposal will be submitted to the Central Advisory Council which the Government are setting up shortly. The Central Advisory Council will study the proposal along with other recommendations contained in the Report of the Committee and make their own final recommendations for consideration of the Government of India. The recommendation of the Committee favouring the trial of an experiment for a certain period was made with a view to enabling the Government to study the various practical problems which might emerge out of its actual working. The scheme of profit-sharing by legislation was, it was felt by the Committee, absolutely new, while as for the cases in which it had been tried on a voluntary basis their results were either yet inconclusive or inapplicable to India. Hence the emphasis on experimenting, which incidentally helped to iron out the differences existing among the various interests represented in the Committee. In a further newspaper announcement, dated the 4th August, 1948, we find the following.: As announced in the resolution on industrial policy, the Government of India proposed to constitute a Central Advisory Council within the next few days. The Council will be tripartite in character and will include representatives of organisations in their representative and not individual capacity. The main functions of the Council will be to advise the Government on measures to be taken to achieve their objectives as set forth in the resolution and, in particular, to evolve a profit-sharing scheme and a scheme for the determination of fair wages to labour. The Council will also advise the Government on the regulation of their relations between employers and labours and on the method by which labour could co-operate with employers in securing stepped-up production.

8(6). It has been represented to us by the Indian Jute Mills' Association that profit-sharing schemes in more industrialised countries of the West have generally proved unsuccessful and they are not likely to meet with any better fate if introduced in this country. It may be that the theory propounded by the Association in this direction is a sweeping generalisation which does not hold good everywhere. But there are probably reasons for thinking that profit-sharing schemes have not proved successful everywhere and they have not necessarily contributed to industrial peace and contentment in all undertakings in other industrialised countries. That is all the greater reason why this extremely important subject of profit-sharing should be scrutinised with the greatest care and circumspection before any scheme can be adopted with reference to any industry in this country. The materials placed before us have been extremely meagre, and we feel that on the basis of these slender materials and of the general statements made before us either by the Unions or by the Indian Jute Mills' Association and in the absence of tangible and helpful data which might be available from the investigation and advice of experts representing all the interests concerned, it is quite impracticable for us to come to any conclusion on the subject of introduction of a profit-sharing scheme in the Jute Textile Industry. It is noticeable that the Government of India is actively taking interest in the subject since the holding of the recent Tripartite Industries Conference, and it may be presumed that the advice of the Central Advisory Council in the light of the report of the Expert Committee will be available in the near future and the Government of India will be in a position to formulate definite proposals on the subject. We do not say that as a Tribunal we are necessarily restricted to the findings of any Council or Committee that may have been set up by the Government of India, or to the decisions that may be arrived at by the Government. But the subject evidently bristles with manifold complexities which cannot be resolved with the slender materials placed at our disposal by the parties concerned, and we do not consider it expedient to come to any hasty conclusion with regard to a key industry in this country. We feel that, in making our award with reference to the earlier issues relating to basic wages, dearness allowance, etc., we have made such adequate arrangements as we have found to be practicable under present circumstances. Any scheme of profit-sharing bonus will mean an addition to the total emoluments which we have provided for. The formulation of such a scheme may very well await further developments, and it will naturally be easier to reach a solution when all the materials collected from all conceivable points of view are made available. As that condition is yet to come into being, we must stay our hands with regard to this issue relating to profit-sharing schemes for the present, and must leave it open' for future decision, either by negotiations between the parties concerned, or, if necessary, by a process of adjudication by a future Tribunal.

ISSUE No. 8.—Payment for Period of Involuntary Unemployment.

9. We next take up Issue No. 8 involving a claim for payment for periods of involuntary unemployment. It is necessary first of all to explain the nature and extent of the claim. Involuntary unemployment arises from stoppage of work owing to causes beyond the control of the employer, such as, fire, catastrophe, breakdown of machinery, stoppage of power-supply, epidemics, civil commotion, shortage of coal or of raw materials or of essential stores, changes in lines of production, etc. It is claimed on behalf of the workers that the employers wish to retain the services of the workers during such periods of stoppage of work, and they should be made to pay adequate remuneration to the workers during such periods, although no work can be actually done. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation in its written statement claimed "pay for involuntary unemployment due to stoppage of work not caused by the employees concerned", and during the hearing pressed for full remuneration for periods of involuntary unemployment. Similarly the Bengal National Chamber of Labour and the Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union claimed payment of full remuneration. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has dealt with the matter more elaborately in its written statement and has demanded that in all cases of involuntary unemployment, irrespective of the nature of the causes responsible, every worker should be paid compensation for the period of stoppage at the rate of 75 per cent. of his wages plus the full amenity allowance, and he should continue to receive weekly rations at the normal subsidised rates. On behalf of the Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union it has been pointed out that as it is difficult to fix full responsibility on the employers for the stoppage of work it is reasonable to claim 75 per cent. of the wages for periods of involuntary unemployment, rather than full remuneration as claimed by the other Unions. The claim for any kind of payment for periods of involuntary unemployment has been vehemently opposed by the Indian Jute Mills' Association. It has been contended on behalf of the Association that in so far as the worker does not do any work during the period of involuntary unemployment brought about by causes beyond the employer's control the worker is not entitled to any remuneration at all under the terms of contract of employment, and if anything used to be paid, under the name of "khoraki" or anything else, under circumstances of stoppage of work owing to shortage of coal, such payment was purely an ex-gratia payment to which the worker was never entitled in law, and the employers cannot justly and legally be saddled with any liability in respect of any payment for periods of involuntary unemployment.

9(1). At this stage it will be useful to trace briefly something in the nature of a historical background with regard to this subject. The Indian Jute Mills' Association did introduce a system of payment for periods of involuntary unemployment owing to shortage of coal, and an allowance called "khoraki" at Rs.4-4 per week used to be paid to each worker concerned. Apart from the contention put forward on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association that this payment was purely an ex-gratia payment and it was not legally due to the worker, an attempt has been made in course of the hearing to draw a line of distinction between the payment of "khoraki" under circumstances of shortage of coal, and the kind of payment for periods of involuntary unemployment which is now claimed on behalf of the workers. It is argued by the learned Counsel on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association that there was an element of voluntariness in the matter of stoppage of work owing to shortage of coal particularly during the years of war. The point which is sought to be made out is that the Indian Jute Mills' Association made an arrangement for distribution of the available quantity of coal in rotation to the mills and in recognition of the regular supply of coal in rotation the mills participated in a system of making payments and pooling their resources in this direction for meeting the cost in respect of payments for the particular variety of involuntary unemployment. It is contended that this was a sort of collective endeavour in which there was a definite amount of voluntariness on the part of the employers concerned, and, therefore, the previous system of payment for periods of involuntary unemployment owing to shortage of coal can be clearly distinguished from other cases of involuntary unemployment which the Labour Unions now seek to bring into the picture. On giving careful consideration to this contention, we fail to see any real distinction. There was obviously considerable shortage of coal at that time and what was arranged by the Indian Jute Mills' Association was to convert possible period of long-term unemployment in some mills into periods of short-term unemployment in all mills within the membership of the Association. It was really a case of even distribution of the periods of unemployment which were inevitable under the particular circumstances. We are unable to agree that the character of the unemployment caused by circumstances of shortage of coal was anything but involuntary unemployment brought about by a cause beyond the employer's control. We conclude, therefore, that there is no real distinction between the system of payment of "khoraki" during the periods of unemployment owing to shortage of coal, and the kind of payment for involuntary unemployment which is now claimed on behalf of the workers. The position therefore is that the Indian Jute Mills' Association did in fact recognise the necessity of introducing a system of payment for involuntary unemployment brought about by a particular cause, namely, shortage of coal during years of special difficulty. The system was obviously adopted not only in the interest of the employees concerned but also in the interest of the employers themselves who were vitally interested in the retention of the services of trained and skilled workers and in preventing abnormal turnover of the employees and in mitigating the tendencies for industrial unrest as far as practicable.

9(2). We may then refer to the steps taken by the Government of India after the 5th Tripartite Labour Conference held in September 1943 and again after the 7th Labour Conference held in November 1945. These steps are contained in letter No. L-1891, dated the 12th June 1944, from the Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, Department of Labour, to all Provincial Governments, etc., (subject:—Compensation for Involuntary Unemployment due to shortage of coal, raw materials or changes in lines of production) and letter No. L-1891, dated the 1st March 1946, from the Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, Department of Labour, to all Provincial Governments, etc., on the same subject. These letters are to be found in Appendix VII under this award. After the deliberations of the 5th Labour Conference held in September 1943 the Government of India felt the necessity of considering proposals for payment for involuntary unemployment with reference to possible schemes of unemployment insurance and promulgated a circular of a recommendatory character as per the letter, dated 12th June 1944. The scheme contained in this circular was altered to some extent in consequence of the deliberations at the 7th Labour Conference held in November 1945, and the amendment was indicated in the letter, dated the 1st March 1946, referred to above. Under this scheme, as recommended by the Government of India, the proposals related only to short-term unemployment due to shortage of coal or raw materials or changes in lines of production of which adequate notice could not be given. The Government also specified certain scales of benefits to be given and there were other particulars incorporated in the scheme. In particular the duration of benefit was limited. We shall have occasion to consider the Government scheme later on in our award. It will be sufficient at this stage to state that the scheme circularised by the Government of India in 1944 and 1946 was only of a recommendatory character and it did not seek to impose any obligation of a compulsory nature on the employers and the result was that, in the Jute Textile Industry at any rate, it was not taken much notice of. The Indian Jute Mills' Association continued to stick to the system of payment of "khoraki" for periods of involuntary unemployment owing to shortage of coal alone as previously, and the scale of payment continued to be determined by the Association as before and there was no attempt to give the subject any shape in conformity with the Government scheme. Eventually the circumstances of occasional shortage of coal having disappeared, the system of payment of "khoraki" has also been discontinued for practical purposes. At present, in case of stoppage of work owing to shortage of coal or of raw materials or any other cause beyond the employer's control, if the workers actually attend they are paid wages for the day plus the amenity allowance with the minimum of eight annas for that day only. They are paid nothing for the subsequent days of involuntary unemployment. If the workers attend on a subsequent specified date, and are not given work again, they are again paid wages for the day plus the amenity allowance for that day only but nothing is paid for subsequent days. It is therefore clear from the system pursued at the present moment by the employers in the jute mills, that there is no system of payment for periods of involuntary unemployment in the real sense. This is the complaint which has been brought prominently to the notice of the Tribunal in course of the present proceedings, the claim being that this state of things should be adequately remedied.

9(3). We next proceed to consider the arguments advanced by both sides as regards the legal position with regard to this subject, the first question being whether the ordinary law imposes any liability on the employer. The legal aspect of the matter was mainly argued on the side of the Unions by Sri S. K. Basu, Advocate, on behalf of the Jute Mill Workers' Federation. The learned Advocate referred to the circular of the Indian Jute Mills' Association on the subject of pension and to the specimen of service card on which particulars relating to the service of each worker are recorded, and he argued that these being the only documents available for consideration, the terms of employment could be inferred from the materials available therein, and he contended that from these materials it should be held that the worker would fulfil his part of the contract as soon as he would present himself for rendering his services, and on such fulfilment of the worker's part of the contract, the employer would be under an obligation to pay to the worker his wages, irrespective of the question as to whether the employer was in a position to provide the work or not. This proposition propounded by Sri S. K. Basu has been strongly opposed by the learned Counsel on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association. On giving careful consideration to the points raised we are of opinion that the materials pointed out by Sri S. K. Basu are not the only materials from which the terms of employment are to be determined, and we are unable to accept his view that the worker would fulfil his part of the contract as soon as he would merely present himself for rendering his services. With regard to the legal aspect of the matter our attention has been drawn by one party or the other to the provisions of sections 38 and 56 of the Indian Contract Act and to the definition "wages" under section 2(vi) of the Payment of Wages Act, and to certain cases decided by English Courts. Although much of our time was taken by elaborate references to cases decided in England, we are of opinion that it is not necessary for our purposes to discuss the principles enunciated in these cases, and it will be sufficient for our present purposes if we discuss the legal aspect which has been agitated before us with reference to the provisions of the Indian law alone. It appears to us that the pre-eminent feature of the Indian Law of Contract, with which we are concerned in relation to the subject under consideration, is involved in section 56 of the Indian Contract Act together with illustration (e) appended thereto. The relevant portion of section 56 of the Indian Contract Act runs as follows:—

> "A contracts to do an act which, after the contract is made, becomes impossible, becomes void when the act becomes impossible."

Illustration (e) under section 56 is stated as follows:—

> "A contracts to act at a theatre for 6 months in consideration of a sum paid in advance by B. On several occasions A is too ill to act. The contract on those occasions becomes void."

The relevant portion of section 38 of the Indian Contract Act runs as follows:—

> "Where a promisor has made an offer for performance to the promisee, and the offer has not been accepted, the promisor is not responsible for non-performance, nor does he thereby lose his rights under the contract. Every such offer must fulfil the following conditions:—

(1) It must be unconditional.

(2) It must be made at a proper time and place and under such circumstances that the person to whom it is made may have a reasonable opportunity of ascertaining that the person by whom it is made is able and willing there and then to do the whole of what he is bound by his promise to do."

The definition of "wages" under section 2(vi) of the Payment of Wages Act is as follows:—" 'Wages' means all remuneration, capable of being expressed in terms of money which would, if the terms of the contract of employment, express or implied, were fulfilled, be payable, whether conditionally upon the regular attendance, good work or conduct or other behaviour of the person employed, or otherwise, to a person employed in respect of his employment or of work done in such employment, etc." We take the view that under the Indian Statutory Law the operation of the principle of section 56 of the Indian Contract Act relating to circumstances of impossibility of performance is inherent with reference to every contract, or in other words, that the performance of every contract is subject to the operation of the principle involved in section 56. Section 38 of the Indian Contract Act assumes the existence of a contract which is capable of performance. Sri S. K. Basu has drawn our attention to condition No. 2 under section 38 and has argued that the worker, as soon as he presents himself for rendering his services, should be considered able and willing there and then to do the whole of his part of the contract, irrespective of the question as to whether any work is available or not, and therefore, the worker having fulfilled the terms of the contract of employment, so far as he is concerned, full remuneration would be payable to him, and this remuneration would be "wages" within the meaning of the Payment of Wages Act. We are unable to accept this interpretation of the law, and we are of opinion that neither section 38 of the Indian Contract Act nor the definition of "wages" under the Payment of Wages Act can be rightly interpreted without reference to the implications of section 65 of the Indian Contract Act under circumstances in which the contract becomes impossible of performance. It is not correct to say that when there has been a stoppage of work owing to causes beyond the employer's control, the worker should be considered as able and willing there and then to do the whole of his part of the contract as soon as he presents himself to render his services. The real position is that the worker is unable to do any work, although he may be willing to do so, under the particular circumstances. We are of opinion that section 38 of the Indian Contract Act, which deals with what is known as the law of tender under the English Law, is of no assistance to the case put forward by the Unions. Similarly under circumstances in which the performance of work becomes impossible and consequently the normal contract becomes impossible of performance, there can be no question of fulfilment of the terms of the contract of employment or of any remuneration being payable within the meaning of section 2(vi) of the Payment of Wages Act. The result is that the provisions of the Payment of Wages Act also can be of no assistance to the case propounded on behalf of the Unions.

9(4). We may now consider the implications of section 56 of the Indian Contract Act and illustration (e) appended thereto. In our present case the contract to do work on payment of remuneration becomes impossible of performance when there is stoppage of work owing to reasons beyond the control of all concerned, including the employer. The question arises as to whether under such circumstances of impossibility of performance brought about by the intervention of uncontrollable factors, the whole contract becomes void, or it becomes void on the particular occasions of impossibility of performance. With reference to illustration (e) it has been argued on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association that under such circumstances the contract becomes only temporarily and not totally void, or in other words, that the contract is suspended for the time being. Though section 56 of the Indian Contract Act does not explicitly speak of any principle of temporary voidness, once a contract becomes impossible of performance, we are inclined to think that the Legislature deliberately appended illustration (e) to the section with the intention of introducing the principle of a contract being temporarily void under certain circumstances. Where the fulfilment of a contract involves the performance of a series of acts spread over a substantial period, and the performance of the contract becomes impossible, owing to the intervention of uncontrollable factors, on some intermediate occasions, the contract must be held to be void for the time being in respect of those occasions only and this position does not, in our view, affect the continuity of the contract in respect of later occasions. Proceeding to apply this principle to the circumstances we are considering, we would observe that when a period of involuntary unemployment supervenes owing to causes beyond everybody's control, the contract of employment is suspended for the time being, with regard to the particular intermediate occasions only, but the contract continues to be operative with regard to later occasions arising after the expiry of the intermediate period. In expressing this view of the law we accept generally what was urged before the Tribunal with regard to this matter by the learned Counsel on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association. It is on this basis that the employer continues to retain the services of the employee, and the employee continues to have a lien on his job, without any final breakdown of the contract as a whole, although the contract becomes temporarily void in respect of certain individual occasions arising during an intermediate period. We further hold that when the contract becomes impossible of performance under circumstances of stoppage of work caused by factors beyond everybody's control, the operation of the contract becomes temporarily suspended, and the employer is not liable in law to pay the wages for the period concerned. The result therefore is that with regard to the issue under consideration, the ordinary civil law of the land does not help the employees.

9(5). The next question is whether the matter should end there, or whether we, sitting on this Industrial Tribunal, should take steps for providing some equitable relief, although the ordinary civil law does not provide for it. It has been argued on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association that the Tribunal should follow the ordinary law and should not do anything beyond the scope of the law. In reply to this contention we must say that the Tribunal would stultify itself if it were to agree to this proposition. The fundamental question before us is whether the claim put forward under this issue is an industrial dispute within the meaning of section 2(k) of the Industrial Disputes Act. From the arguments advanced on both sides during the hearing we have understood that there is no controversy at all with regard to the position that this claim constitutes an industrial dispute. It need not perhaps be impressed on any one that this claim is connected with what should be the terms of employment according to the view-point of the workers. As soon as it is accepted, as it has been accepted by all concerned, that this claim constitutes an industrial dispute, this Tribunal has complete jurisdiction to deal with the matter not only on the basis of the ordinary law of the land but also on principles of equity and social justice. We are dealing with an industrial dispute of an acute nature involving a long-standing grievance which has not been resolved in spite of the attempts of the Government to reach a solution by propounding schemes of a recommendatory character. It is our incumbent duty to take steps for establishing industrial peace and for preventing causes of industrial unrest, provided that we can do something on the basis of principles of equity and social justice, and we feel that our hands are in no way tied down by the ordinary law of the land. It has been further contended on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association that the Tribunal should not go ahead of legislation, and it should stay its hands till the Government takes steps for bringing about some legislative measure. We are unable to agree to this view also. Looking at the letters circularised by the Government of India in 1944 and 1946, we realise that the Government was not prepared at that time to place the matter before the Legislature. There might be many reasons for which Government felt that time was not yet ripe or opportune for taking the matter to the Legislature. With those aspects however we do not feel primarily concerned. We are bound to look to the present conditions of the industry and give an award in the best interest of the industry as a whole involving both employers and employees, irrespective of the question as to whether any piece of legislation on the subject is in contemplation or not. We have therefore decided not to wait for legislation but to do our duty in the light of present conditions, in our effort to settle the particular industrial dispute involved in the issue under consideration. The only question is to what extent we should take action, and on what lines.

9(6). We have given our anxious thoughts to the matter and have come to the conclusion that the scheme circularised by the Government of India by the letters, dated 12th June 1944 and 1st March 1946, may conveniently form the basis of our conclusions. Before we formulate the directions which we are going to give in the award with regard to this particular subject, we may give brief reasons why we have decided to make certain changes with reference to the Government scheme. We proceed on the principle that the scheme we are laying down is in the nature of unemployment insurance, just as the Government scheme was. It has been contended on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association that a scheme like the Government scheme is no longer relevant in so far as the war is over. We are unable to agree to this view as we consider that from many standpoints the present times are no less abnormal than the years of war, and from certain points of view the present times are perhaps more difficult. We feel that in trying to propound a scheme keeping in view the Government scheme as a basis for consideration, we are pursuing a fairly conservative line of action in so far as, in doing so, we are turning down substantial portions of the demands put forward by the Unions. We are propounding our scheme with the idea that something should be done, and this is the minimum permissible under the particular circumstances. We now proceed to indicate the points in respect of which we propose to deviate to some extent from the details of the Government scheme, as per Appendix VII.

9(7). As regards the kinds of unemployment covered we are of opinion that the specification of the causes of stoppage of work as shortage of coal or raw materials or changes in lines of production, as found in the Government scheme, is inadequate, and in our view the list of kinds of unemployment should be expanded so as to cover all probable causes as contemplated in the Standing Orders which we are going to frame in connection with another issue. As regards benefits to be given we have taken the view that there need not be different claims of benefit for different categories of workers, and it will be fair and adequate to lay down a flat rate of benefit for all workers. The Government scheme laid down a scale of 75 per cent.

of the ordinary rate of pay for the first fortnight of unemployment and 50 per cent. of the ordinary rate of pay for the second fortnight. We have decided upon a flat rate of 50 per cent. of basic wages and of dearness allowance proper, and full food concession in addition. We are laying down a principle for calculating the ordinary rate of pay in respect of piece rate workers. This point does not appear to have been mentioned in the Government scheme. As in the Government scheme we are restricting the duration of benefit to one month in each half-year. We have however thought it fair and proper to do away with the further restriction in the Government scheme to the effect that no benefit would be available in the half-yearly periods until the number of days of involuntary unemployment has exceeded seven in the aggregate in the half-year. We do not see why a worker should not get the benefit if the period of involuntary unemployment lasts for less than 7 days. As regards the conditions attached to the benefit we are adopting the restriction regarding the muster roll as in the Government scheme, as we are of opinion that there should be some means of ensuring that the particular worker is not being employed elsewhere. As regards the other conditions mentioned in the Government scheme we are making certain necessary changes. As regards the other heads in the Government scheme we do not think it necessary for our purposes to say anything.

9(8). We therefore direct that the following scheme of payment for periods of involuntary unemployment should be observed by all concerned. The details of the scheme are as follows:—

(I) Kinds of unemployment covered.

(a) The award relates only to short-term involuntary unemployment due to stoppage of work owing to fire, catastrophe, breakdown of machinery, stoppage of power-supply, epidemics, civil commotion, shortage of coal or of raw materials or of essential stores, changes in lines of production, and other causes beyond the employer's control.

(b) The directions do not cover closures of factories or of departments due to special Government orders.

(II) Benefits to be given.

(a) The benefit to be given to each worker should be on the scale of 50 per cent. of the basic wages and of the dearness allowance proper, and each worker should continue to receive the weekly rations at the normal subsidised rates, or the cash value of the food concession.

(b) In the case of a piece-rate worker the rate of wages should be taken to be the average wages of the preceding seven days during which the worker actually worked.

(c) The duration of the benefit should be one month in each half-year from January to June and July to December, respectively.

(d) This involuntary unemployment benefit will not qualify a worker for bonuses determined by reference to earnings over any period.

(III) Conditions attached to benefit.

(a) To qualify for the benefit a worker must answer to a muster roll once a day at his usual place of employment, or with the permission of the employer, at any other place.

(b) A worker will be ineligible for the benefit if he unreasonably refuses work even of a different sort in his usual factory or (provided the employment offered is in the same locality) by transfer from one department to another in the same undertaking or from one jute mill to another.

(c) The scheme in the award will not affect the right of the employer to discharge the worker, or the right of the employee to discharge himself with due notice according to law and the prevailing rules of service.

ISSUE No. 10.—Revision of Working Hours and of Spreadover Period.

11. As already indicated we are not going to deal with Issue No. 9, the proceedings in respect of which have been stayed by a prohibitory order passed by the High Court of Calcutta. We shall, therefore, skip over Issue No. 9 and pass on to Issue No. 10 relating to the question of revision of working hours and of spreadover period. The issue is obviously divisible into two parts dealing with (1) revision of spreadover period, and (2) revision of working hours. Proceeding to deal with the question of spreadover period we observe that the Jute Mill Workers' Federation alone, among the Unions appearing before us, asked for an extension of the daily spreadover period within the meaning of section 38 of the Factories Act by one hour. During the hearing, however, the spokesman of the Federation abandoned the demand. We are, therefore, not called upon to come to any decision, and we do not make any award on the subject.

11(1). As regards the question of revision of working hours, the demand again may be divided into two parts. The first part relates to the contention of the Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union that women workers are being made to work in contravention of the provisions of section 45(1)(b) of the Factories Act which lays down that no woman shall be allowed to work in a factory except between 6 a.m. and 7 p.m. Arguing the point on behalf of the Union Sri Indrajit Gupta urged strict compliance with the provisions of the section. On behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association it was pointed out that a subsequent Ordinance called the Bengal Jute Mills Temporary Provision Ordinance effected some modification of the provisions of section 45(1)(b) of the Factories Act, and by virtue of the modification brought about by the Ordinance the management of a mill was exempted from strict adherence to the provisions of the section as regards women workers. In course of the discussion, however, the Indian Jute Mills' Association agreed and undertook to abide by the provisions of section 45(1)(b) of the Factories Act as regards the employment of women workers in spite of the Ordinance. The matter was thus settled. We hold that this undertaking should be given effect to in all the mills involved in this reference. We make our award on the point accordingly.

11(2). The next part of the demand regarding the revision of working hours relates to section 34 of the Factories Act, 1934, which lays down that no adult worker shall be allowed to work in a factory for more than 48 hours in any week. It is to be noted that the number of hours was reduced from 54 to 48 by the Factories (Amendment) Act X of 1946. The first question which has been raised with regard to this issue is whether this Tribunal has jurisdiction to adjudicate upon a matter of this kind in view of the law involved in section 34 of the Factories Act. The Indian Jute Mills' Association in its written statement has contended that the Tribunal is not competent to deal with this matter. With regard to this contention, we may observe at the outset that the number of hours of work in a week being one of the conditions of labour, the demand for reduction of the working hours gives rise to a dispute between the employers and the workmen which must be held to be connected with the conditions of labour of some persons. The dispute is therefore certainly an industrial dispute, and this Tribunal has jurisdiction to deal with it. The next question is whether the Tribunal is precluded by the provisions of section 34 of the Factories Act which provides for the maximum number of hours of work, from giving a direction for reduction of the working hours. It has been contended on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association that section 34 of the Factories Act gives the employer a right to make a worker work up to 48 hours in a week, and an order of reduction of the working hours would amount to curtailing this right which the law is said to confer on the employer. In view of what we are going to find on the merits of the matter, this point of law need not detain us very long. We may however mention the lines of argument advanced by the parties with regard to this legal aspect. The learned Counsel on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association referred us to the award given by Mr. Justice Divatia in the industrial dispute between Messrs. Lever Brothers (India), Ltd. and its workers, published in the Bombay Labour Gazette, Volume XXI, 1941-42, at page 82. The demand in that case was that if any workman got injured in the factory premises and if he was recommended by the Medical Officer to abstain from work, the workman should be entitled to full wages for such period of absence. Section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act makes mandatory provisions for compensation for total or partial disability in such cases and with reference to that provision of the Workmen's Compensation Act the learned Adjudicator observed as follows: "I think it will be agreed that in all cases where State legislation secures certain advantages to certain sections of the community, and imposes burdens on other sections of the community, an improvement of the conditions or advantages already gained should be secured through further amending legislation so that such advantages may be obtained equally by all those who are entitled to them and that the burden which the granting of such advantages places on others may also be equally imposed on all of such persons. There is, of course, no objection to the particular employer granting greater or more generous concessions than those imposed upon him by legislation provided that he does so of his own free will, but the burden of granting such additional concessions cannot be imposed upon him by his employees or by any third party." With reference to the principle involved in the award referred to, it is contended on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association that the Tribunal is not entitled to impose any heavier burden on the employer by giving a direction for the reduction of the working hours, and if there is any need of further reduction of the working hours, such need should be met by legislation and not by adjudication by a particular Tribunal in respect of a particular industry or concern. On the other side the learned Advocate for the Jute Mills Workers' Federation has argued that Mr. Justice Divatia's view on the subject is quite distinguishable from our present case in so far as section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act makes a mandatory provision as regards the scale of compensation which an employer would be compelled to pay, whereas in our case a question of reducing the working hours to a figure below 48 does not militate against the spirit of the provisions of section 34 of the Factories Act. From this point of view it is contended by the learned Advocate that our present case is distinguishable from the case which Mr. Justice Divatia was dealing with. As we have already indicated, it is not necessary for us to decide the question of law raised before us. We pass on to consider the merits of the subject involved in the demand.

11(3). The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has claimed that the maximum number of hours of work for an adult in a jute mill should be fixed at 40 per week and that no exemption such as is contemplated under section 44 of the Factories Act, should be permitted in respect of the existing maximum of 48 hours as provided by section 34 of the Factories Act. The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union has also demanded a 40-hour week. As already noticed, the number of hours of work per week was reduced from 54 to 48 by an Amending Act of 1946. Sri Indrajit Gupta spoke at length, during the hearing, on the subject of industrial fatigue and the incidence of occupational diseases. He referred to certain statements filed by the Indian Jute Mills' Association on the subject of attendance of patients at different dispensaries attached to some jute mills, and contended that there was an increase in the incidence of diseases. It cannot, however, be made out as to how many of the patients attending these dispensaries came from outside the mills, as we understand that outsiders are also permitted to attend the mill dispensaries. It cannot also be made out as to how far the diseases were caused by the alleged long hours of work. We do not think the figures of attendance at mill dispensaries can be of any assistance with regard to this matter. Our attention has been drawn to the Government Memorandum in connection with the 7th Labour Conference held in November 1945, pages 28 and 29, on the subject of reduction of working hours under the Factories Act. Some portions of this Memorandum are on the following lines:—"The reduction in the hours of work in factories to reasonable limits is needed not only for securing for the workers humane social conditions and adequate leisure to enable them to improve their standard of living but also for increasing the efficiency of industrial labour. Instances are not wanting where reduced hours lead to increased production. There is evidence that where hours of work were increased from 9 to 10 in the Textile Industry at Ahmedabad, production dropped and the 9-hour day had to be restored. On the other hand when the Indian Jute Mills' Association reduced the working hours from 60 to 54 in view of reduced demand for the products in the exports market it was found that production hardly fell at all. The First International Labour Conference held at Washington in 1919 adopted a Convention limiting the hours of work in industrial undertakings to 8 hours in the day and 48 hours in the week. The Convention was unconditionally ratified by 18 States but by a special Article the Government of India was allowed to adopt a 60-hour week having regard to the conditions then prevailing in the country. The Article, however, concluded with the words "Further provision limiting the hours of work in India shall be considered at a future meeting of the General Conference. Notwithstanding the 60-hour week permitted by the Convention, the Royal Commission on Labour in India (1929-31) as a result of their investigation recommended for perennial factories a 54-hour week. ....

These recommendations were incorporated in the Factories Act, 1934. The result of the working of the 54-hour week as stated already has amply justified this reduction of the hours of work. .... It is considered that the present is an opportune moment for taking up this question of a 48-hour week". Early in the year 1946 the Government of India Labour Investigation Committee was considering this subject of working hours, and on page 143 of the Main Report the Committee has made certain observations on the following lines:—"Curtailment in working hours can be profitably effected only up to the point beyond which returns begin to suffer and we are not sure if that point is yet reached in India." Later on in the same paragraph, the Committee observes as follows:—"We are glad to note in this connection that the Government of India have taken the initiative and introduced legislation reducing the hours of work to 48 per week in all concerns subject to the Factories Act." What the 7th Labour Conference of November 1945 was aiming at or what the Labour Investigation Committee was expecting to see early in 1946, was eventually achieved in fact by the Factories (Amendment) Act X of 1946 and the number of hours of work per week was actually reduced from 54 to 48. At the present moment we are not very far from the date on which the Amending Act brought about this reduction in the number of working hours. The pertinent question before us sitting on this Tribunal is whether there are any circumstances to justify our interference with the maximum number of hours of work as provided for by section 34 of the Factories Act, 1934, with reference to the Jute Textile Industry alone. It is noticeable that section 51 of the New Factories Bill also provides for a 48-hour week. We are not quite sure that further reduction of the number of working hours at this stage will not adversely affect the standard of production. On giving very careful consideration to all aspects of the question we come to the clear conclusion that no satisfactory case for directing a further reduction in the maximum number of working hours has been made out by the Unions. We are, therefore, unable to give any direction on the subject and we make our award accordingly.

ISSUE No. 11.—Abolition of Contract Labour and Sardar System.

12. We pass on now to Issue No. 11 on the subject of abolition of contract labour and the Sardar system. This issue is obviously to be dealt with under two distinct heads, namely, (1) contract labour, and (2) the Sardar system. We shall take the subject of contract labour first. In their written statements the Jute Mill Workers' Federation and the Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union demanded immediate abolition of the system of employment of labour through contractors in the jute mills in Bengal. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has stated that workers employed by contractors are victims of exploitation at the hands of the latter and they seldom receive their full wages at the time of payment. The Indian Jute Mills Association in its written statement states that it is in complete agreement with the Unions on the point that contract labour should be abolished, and it is pointed out that endeavour has been made for some time past to eliminate the contract system of employment of labour and that efforts in this direction have been successful to a considerable extent. It is stated that in 1940 there were 7,914 workers employed under contractors and in 1947 there were only about 3,000 such workers employed in the mills. It is observed that the Association is anxious to see the disappearance of the contract labour system and is agreeable to devise ways and means to achieve this end as expeditiously as possible.

12(1). Contract labour is employed in the jute mills for unloading of raw jute and loading of finished products. Although this is an essential process in the working of the jute mills, this part of the work is delegated to contractors who employ their own labour for the purpose. The Report of the Royal Commission on Labour in India (1931) adversely commented on the employment of contract labour in the Mining Industry and the remarks made by the Commission on page 119 of the Report are equally applicable to the subject of employment of contract labour in the Jute Textile Industry. Some of the relevant remarks are on the following lines—"We have found it to be generally true that workmen employed by salaried managers, who are personally responsible for their workers, receive more consideration than those employed by contractors. We believe that whatever the merits of the system in primitive times, it is now desirable, if the management is to discharge completely the complex responsibility laid upon it by the law and by equity, that the manager should have full control over the selection, hours of work and payment of the workers." Some of the remarks made by the Government of India Labour Investigation Committee on pages 83 and 84 of the Main Report are also pertinent. We agree with the Committee's observation that "the contract system undoubtedly enables the principal employer to escape most of the provisions of the Labour Acts."

The Bihar Labour Enquiry Committee have also condemned the system of recruitment through contractors who, according to the Committee, ordinarily "lack the sense of moral obligation towards labour which the employers or their managers are expected to have and therefore do not even hesitate to exploit the helpless position of the labour in their charge." We agree generally with the spirit of these observations in connection with the system of employment of labour under contractors. There can be no doubt that the presence of the contractor between the principal employer and the workers considerably diminishes the direct responsibility of the principal employer in respect of the conditions of employment, hours of work and wages of the workers. Another serious defect of this system is that the contractor usually makes a profit out of the payments received from the principal employer and the workers are to that extent deprived of their remuneration, and the process of profit-making indulged in by the contractor results in sweating of labour. In course of the hearing of the issue on 5th January, 1947, the Indian Jute Mills Association agreed to abolish the contract labour system within 3 months. It is hoped that the system has already been abolished in all the mills. We direct that the system of employment of contract labour in the jute mills concerned for the purpose of unloading and loading of raw jute and finished products or for any other essential process in the manufacture of jute products shall be abolished forthwith, if it has not already been abolished, and all labour for such work shall be employed directly by the management of the mills.

12(2). We now proceed to discuss the second part of the issue relating to the Sardar system. Among the Unions appearing before the Tribunal, the Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union has demanded that the Sardar system should be abolished. The Sardar system means the recruitment of labour through sardars. In the early stages of the Jute Textile Industry the sardars were employed as recruiting agents to overcome the difficulties arising from dearth of labour. There has been a system in the jute mills to depend upon the sardar as an intermediary for establishing contact with labour for the purpose of recruitment. The objection is to the function of the sardars as recruiting agents and as persons who exercise considerable influence in the matter of appointment or discharge of workers. There is, however, no objection to the sardars functioning as supervisors or foremen in the different departments of the mills.

12(3). The Indian Jute Mills' Association has stated in its written statement that the evils of the Sardar system have already engaged its attention and it has been trying to eliminate the abuses of the system for some time past. It is also stated that reforms have been practised in this direction in a great many mills and that their beneficial effects would have been more in evidence to-day had it not been for the strain of the years of war. It is further stated that Head Sardars have been entirely eliminated in a number of mills.

12(4). The evils attendant on the system of recruitment of labour through an intermediary were noticed by the Royal Commission on Labour in India and the Commission has condemned the system on pages 23 and 24 of the Report, with regard to its general undesirable features including the temptations to which the intermediary Sardar is exposed and the evils of corruption and exploitation. The sytsem has been similarly condemned by the Government of India Labour Investigation Committee on pages 79 and 80 of the Main Report. The position is that the sardar is not only a recruiting agent but is also a supervisor or a gangman who is both a sub-employer and a worker sharing the income with other workers. As the Sardar is also a departmental Foreman, he may exercise considerable unwholesome influence on the management in the matter of appointment and discharge of permanent and temporary workers and this influence has often to be purchased or avoided with money or other gratifications in kind.

12(5). The Indian Jute Mills' Association has stated that Line Sardars or Foremen should be continued, while it agrees to abolish forthwith the system of recruitment of labour through the sardar or the employment of labour with his recommendation. The Unions concede that they do not demand the withdrawal of the supervisory duties of Sardars, but they are only anxious to get rid of the Sardars' official connection in the matter of recruitment of labour and of appointment or discharge of workers. We therefore find no difficulty in coming to a conclusion on the subject as all parties have agreed on the central factor in the issue.

12(6). It has been pointed out by the Association that there are Labour Bureaus in many of the mills of a considerable size, and that the function of the bureau is to advise the management in the matter of appointment or discharge of the workers in the mill. The recruitment of labour is being made through the labour bureaus which have been established in many mills. We find useful information on the subject on pages 9 and 14 in the Report on an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India by S. R. Deshpande. It appears that the departmental heads do not always employ the persons recommended by the labour bureaus but suggest instead the names of other persons of their choice, and in many cases the Labour Officers are not vested with sufficient powers and they are apt to become mere tools in the hands of the supervisory staff. It appears that the influence enjoyed by the supervisory staff reacts unfavourably on the system of work in the labour bureau and that in spite of the appointment of Labour Officers and the establishment of labour bureaus, the system of recruitment leaves much to be desired as the Labour Officers are in practice subordinate to the Managers whose tendency is to support the subordinate supervisory staff controlling the different departments.

12(7). We hold that the employment of Sardars as Line Sardars or Foremen or members of the supervisory staff generally may continue. The Unions demand the abolition of the Sardar system, that is to say, the system of employment of Sardars for recruiting labour or of vesting Sardars with powers of interfering with the appointment or discharge of workers, permanent or temporary. The Indian Jute Mills' Association has agreed that the proposed abolition should take place without delay. We accordingly direct that the Sardar system, as defined above, be abolished forthwith in all the mills concerned. We further recommend that a labour bureau should be established in every jute mill as soon as practicable, if it has not already been established, and all appointments of permanent and temporary workers should be made by the management as far as practicable in accordance with the recommendations of the Labour Officer, if any, in charge of the bureau.

ISSUE No. 12.—Standing Orders and Rules of Service: Security of Service: Probationary Period.

13. We now pass on to consider Issue No. 12 relating to—

(a) standing orders and rules of service,

(b) security of service, and

(c) probationary period.

It is necessary at the outset to explain the implications of the division of this issue into sub-issues. "Rules of Service" apparently include such subjects as Standing Orders, Security of Service and Probationary Period.

They also include rules regarding leave and holidays and in fact many subjects which are connected with the terms of employment and conditions of labour. Yet, under the issue which we are considering, the expression "Rules of Service" has been used in some sort of contra-distinction with "Standing Orders", "Security of Service" and "Probationary Period". The issue was arranged in this manner in order to bring out the real points of dispute between the parties, and also to obviate certain procedural difficulties arising out of the provisions of the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act XX of 1946. Under this Act "Standing Orders" means rules relating to matters set out in the schedule appended to the Act. In the schedule only some of the possible terms of employment and conditions of labour have been included. The appropriate Government is authorised to provide for additional matters to be included in the schedule, and to make rules in that behalf. The Government of Bengal, and, since after the partition of the country, the Government of West Bengal have not made any rules prescribing additional matters to be included in the schedule. The position, therefore, is that only such of the rules of service as relate to matters set out in the schedule can be properly described as standing orders liable to be certified under the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act XX of 1946. Of the rules of service which cannot strictly be said to be standing orders under the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act there are some which are subject matters of other issues which had to be framed separately in the light of their importance. The Unions appearing before us appeared to attach considerable importance to the items of "Security of Service" and "Probationary period" and these were, therefore, shown under separate sub-issues. The matters which were actually discussed during the hearing under the subjects of "Rules of Service", "Security of Service" and "Probationary Period" were such matters as cadre of permanent posts, appointment as permanent workmen, effect of transfer of ownership of mills and of changes in the managing agency on continuity of service, registration for work as badlis, appointment of registered badlis, etc. The representatives of the Labour Unions referred, during the hearing, to the dispute over the rules of service between the Unions and the Indian Jute Mills' Association. The Association appears to have framed certain rules of service which were intended to be given effect to from 1st July 1945 and which have been reproduced as Appendix IV on pages 59-62 in S. R. Deshpande's Report of an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India. The Unions considered the Association's draft rules to be quite unsatisfactory and inadequate and, in view of their protests, the Government of Bengal formed a Trade Unions Jute Advisory Committee. This Committee drew up an agreed draft which was submitted to the Labour Commissioner on the 2nd January 1946, prior to the passing of the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act. The Indian Jute Mills' Association did not accept the agreed draft as framed by the Committee. It appears that the draft Standing Orders framed by the Association have not yet been certified under the provisions of the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act. The dispute was thus in existence when this Tribunal was set up on the 15th August, 1947. The Unions accordingly brought up the dispute before the Tribunal for adjudication. Dr. Waight, Counsel on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association, contended that this Tribunal had no jurisdiction to frame the Standing Orders in view of the law involved in the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, and in any case the Tribunal should not, by framing the Standing Orders, interfere with the right of the employers to frame their own Standing Orders by applying their own ideas of fairness and reasonableness to the subject. The learned Counsel also pointed out the implications of section 5(2) of the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act and contended that by imposing a set of Standing Orders on the parties concerned the Tribunal would deprive the Trade Unions also of their right to get an opportunity of being heard. We consider these objections put forward by Dr. Waight in the light of the provisions of the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act to be unsubstantial. It is quite clear that the difference between the employers and the workmen over the rules of service is historically old, and the view-points of the parties cannot be easily reconciled. The rules of service, which have been agitated before us, are undoubtedly matters connected with the terms of employment or with the conditions of labour of the workmen, and any dispute over such matters must be held to be an industrial dispute within the meaning of section 2(k) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. This Tribunal has, therefore, ample jurisdiction to deal with and adjudicate upon this industrial dispute, and we cannot legitimately refuse to exercise the jurisdiction vested in us as a Tribunal, merely because, had there been no such dispute, the parties have certain rights derived from the provisions of the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act. The rights of the parties under the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act must be held to be restricted by the circumstances arising from the existing industrial dispute, which we consider it to be our duty to try to resolve. It is true that the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, does not abrogate any of the provisions of the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act of 1946. It is to be noted further that there is nothing in the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act which precludes this Tribunal from considering the subject of Standing Orders as an industrial dispute. We are not fundamentally concerned with the question of procedure for certification of the Standing Orders under the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, but we are concerned with the question of adjudicating upon the industrial dispute with which we are confronted. We do not think the procedure as laid down in the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act is hit at all, if, under the compelling authority of an award made by the Tribunal, the employer is forced to submit the Standing Orders as framed by the Tribunal for certification to the proper authority, and the employees are prevented from raising any objection under section 5(2) of the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act. We hold that this Tribunal has ample jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the industrial dispute and to deal with all rules of service including what may technically be called "Standing Orders" within the meaning of the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, and we consider it our duty to frame Standing Orders apart from other rules of service.

13(1). In framing the Standing Orders we have decided for the sake of convenience to all concerned, to restrict ourselves to the items given in the schedule to the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, and we shall deal with the other rules of service separately. The question has arisen, during the hearing, as to what should be the basis of our consideration with regard to the matter of framing the Standing Orders and other rules of service. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour has urged the acceptance of the rules drafted by it, which appear to have been adopted, with certain alterations, from the draft rules framed by the Trade Unions Jute Advisory Committee. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has urged the acceptance of the latter rules, which however have not been presented to us for consideration. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation has submitted detailed drafts of their suggestions by way of supplementary statements. On the other hand the Indian Jute Mills Association has pressed for acceptance of the Association's draft rules. Apart from these, we have got the Model Standing Orders framed by the Government of India under the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act. It is noticeable that there are yet no model rules framed by the Government of West Bengal. After hearing all the parties we came to the conclusion that we would take the model rules as the basis of our consideration, and then co-ordinate the draft rules of the Indian Jute Mills' Association and those submitted for our consideration by the Unions. Having pursued this procedure and having heard the points of view of all parties with regard to each item in an elaborate manner we have framed the Standing Orders and also the other rules of service which come under the headings "Rules of Service", "Security of Service" and "Probationary Period". The Standing Orders framed by us will be found in the First Part of Appendix VIII under this Award, and the other rules of service will be found in the Second Part of the same Appendix which will form a part of our Award. As we have already indicated we have largely followed the Model Standing Orders framed by the Government of India, but we have on some occasions deviated from them when we have found it necessary to do so. In some instances we have resorted to an adaptation of the draft rules of the Indian Jute Mills Association, and in other instances we have paid attention, as far as we could, to the suggestions given by the different Unions. The Standing Orders and other rules of service framed by us as per Appendix VIII will speak for themselves. It may, however, be useful to state briefly some of the reasonings which have weighed with us in coming to conclusions in the matter of giving final shape to the Standing Orders and other rules.

13(2). We proceed to deal with certain points relating to Standing Orders first. Paragraph 1 of the Standing Orders is on the subject of the date on which they shall come into force. The date shall be identical with the date on which our Award will come into force. In paragraph 2(a) of the Standing Orders we have decided to include probationers and apprentices in the categories of workmen on the lines followed in the Model Standing Orders. We are of opinion that in suitable cases there should be a period of observation and training before a workman may be appointed permanently. As paragraph 2 aims simply classifying workmen we have not indicated under this paragraph the particular sections of work to which the system of probationers should apply. We have preferred to do this under paragraph 2 with the heading "Appointment as permanent workmen" under Other Rules of Service in the Second Part of Appendix VIII. It will appear from the latter that probationers will ordinarily be required for the clerical staff and in the Engineering Section and for appointment as Line Sardars. We make it clear that it is not incumbent that every person must necessarily pass through a period of probation before being confirmed as a permanent workman, and there will be no bar to a person being appointed directly as a permanent workman without being made a probationer, except in the cases we have specifically enumerated in paragraph 2 of the Second Part of the Appendix VIII. In paragraph 3 of the Standing Orders we have provided for Service Cards, Employment Books and Service Card Registers substantially following the Indian Jute Mills' Association's draft. The form of Service-record Cards and Employment Book, which should be identical in particulars, has been adapted, with slight modifications, from the I.J.M.A. form found in Appendix III on page 58 of S. R. Deshpande's Report on an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill industry in India. The form adopted by us will be found in Appendix IX under this Award. As regards paragraph 6 relating to Publication of Wage Rates, the representatives of the Unions suggested that they should be displayed not only on notice boards maintained at or near the main entrance of the establishment and at the time-keeper's office, if any, but also on notice boards fixed in all departments of the establishment. We do not think that this additional exhibition of wage-rates in all departments is really necessary. As regards paragraph 7 relating to Shift-Working, the Indian Jute Mills Association objected to our dealing with the subject on the ground that the Tribunal has been restrained by an order of the High Court of Calcutta from dealing with Issue No. 9 relating to the Procedure for Retrenchment and Payment of Compensation. We hold that this contention of the Association is unsubstantial and untenable in so far as the subject before us is quite distinct from the subject-matter of Issue No. 9. We have, therefore, framed a Standing Order relating to Shift-Working under paragraph 7. In paragraph 8 we have largely accepted the draft of the Indian Jute Mills Association. We have been unable to accept the suggestion of the Labour Unions to the effect that there should be a grace period of 15 minutes for late-comers, as we are of opinion that any acceptance of the suggestion would amount to encouragement of unpunctuality and slackness. We think that with a reasonable amount of effort the Standing Order as we have framed will not operate harshly against the workmen. As regards paragraph 9 relating to Leave and Holidays we have largely followed the Model Standing Orders framed by the Government of India with suitable modifications. We are of opinion that the draft of the Indian Jute Mills Association is less favourable to the workmen as no allowance is made there for overstay of leave. As paragraphs 9 and 10 of the Model Rules deal with subjects coming under the same item in the schedule to the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, we have thought it proper to combine the subject-matters of paragraphs 9 and 10 of the Model Rules in our paragraph 9. Paragraph 10 of the Standing Orders relating to Requirement to enter Premises by Certain Gates and Liability to Search has been largely adapted from the draft of the Indian Jute Mills Association on the subject which does not appear to have been dealt with in the Model Rules at all. We have introduced slight changes in the Association's draft to meet the criticism offered by the Unions as far as practicable. In framing paragraph 11 of the Standing Orders relating to Payment of Wages, we have omitted paragraph 11(2) of the Model Standing Orders which we consider to be inappropriate, and we have substituted part of paragraph 9 of the draft of the Indian Jute Mills' Association, which has been agreed to by the spokesmen of the Unions. Paragraph 12 relating to Stoppage of Work has been drafted in conformity with our Award in respect of Issue No. 8 on the subject of Payment for Period of Involuntary Unemployment. In framing paragraph 13 relating to Termination of Employment we have thought fit to introduce certain new features which have no reference to any of the draft rules placed before us, and we have fixed notice periods in accordance with what we have thought to be just and reasonable. As regards paragraph 14 relating to Disciplinary Action for Misconduct we have adapted materials from the Model Standing Orders and from the draft of the Indian Jute Mills Association, in the light of the views expressed by the representatives of the Unions during the hearing. We have made no attempt to define "Habitual Misconduct", as in our opinion, it defies definition. In framing the item (c) (xi) under paragraph 14 we have borrowed entirely from the Model Standing Orders, and we have found ourselves unable to modify the language in the light of the criticism offered by the spokesmen of the Unions, and we have left it for the law in force for the time being to define what is an illegal strike. In paragraph 14(e) we have laid down the procedure for taking disciplinary action. Paragraph 15 of the Standing Orders provides for complaints and appeals. We have been unable to accept the suggestion of the Unions to the effect that a joint board of employers and employees should deal with such matters, inasmuch as such an arrangement might come in conflict with the employers' normal rights in this behalf, under the existing conditions of relationship between employers and employees.

13(3). We next take up the subject of the Other Rules of Service including the items of "Security of Service" under Issue No. 12(b), and "Probationary Period" under Issue No. 12(c). For the sake of convenience we have considered all these things together. The rules we have framed are set forth in the Second Part of Appendix VIII under this Award; as we have already indicated. Though it was represented to us that a system of probation was not much in vogue at present and there was no need to introduce such a system, we have decided to introduce a system of probation with regard to certain categories of employees, which will be found in paragraph 2 under the heading "Appointment as Premanent Workmen". The rules of service we have framed will largely speak for themselves. With regard to badlis we have largely accepted the Labour Bureau Rules of the India Jute Company, Limited, which were placed before us during the hearing, as we consider them to be fair and reasonable. We hold that the contention of the Indian Jute Mills' Association to the effect that the framing of a rule relating to a cadre of permanent posts is intrinsically connected with the subject of retrenchment under Issue No. 9 which we are precluded from considering by virtue of a prohibitory order issued by the High Court of Calcutta, has no substance. We are of opinion that this matter constitutes an industrial dispute of a different nature and this Tribunal has ample jurisdiction to deal with it. It is not necessary for us to go into further details about the Other Rules of Service which we have framed as per the Second Part of Appendix VIII.

ISSUE No. 13.—Rules of Leave, Maternity Leave, Holidays.

14. We next take up issue No. 13 relating to rules of (a) leave, (b) maternity leave, and (c) holidays. The Unions appearing before us have laid great stress on the question of industrial fatigue and the need of giving facilities for rest and recoupment of health in the cases of all classes of employees. It has been urged before the Tribunal that the existing facilities for leave and holidays are extremely meagre, and more extensive provisions should be made. All the Unions appearing before us have demanded privilege leave for one month in a year for all classes of employees. As regards casual leave, sick leave, and festival holidays in a year the demands are of a varying nature. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation has asked for casual leave for seven days, sick leave on full pay for fifteen days, and on half pay for fifteen days, and festival holidays for twelve days. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has asked for casual leave for fifteen days, sick leave on full pay for fifteen days and on half pay for fifteen days, and festival holidays for eighteen days. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour has demanded casual leave for ten days, sick leave on full pay for fifteen days, and on half pay for fifteen days, and festival holidays for eighteen days. The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union has asked for casual leave for fifteen days, sick leave on half pay for fifteen days, and all gazetted holidays. The Bansberia Jute Mill Employees' Union has demanded casual leave for fifteen days, and sick leave on full pay for one month on half pay for two months, and without pay for three months. We may state here the existing system with regard to leave and holidays. As regards manual and clerical employees who are "workers" within the meaning of section 2(h) of the Factories Act, every Sunday is to be observed as a weekly holiday, or a substitute holiday must be given under the provisions of section 35 of the Act. Apart from this, section 49B of the Factories Act lays down that every adult worker, manual or clerical, who has completed a period of 12 months' continuous service in a factory shall be allowed, during the subsequent period of 12 months, holidays for a period of 10 consecutive days inclusive of the day or days, if any, on which he is entitled to a holiday under section 35, and these statutory holidays are allowed to be carried forward, wholly or in part, to a succeeding period of 12 months. These privileges under the Factories Act are, however, available to those employees who are "workers" within the meaning of the Act, that is to say, persons employed in any manufacturing process, or in cleaning any part of the machinery or premises used for a manufacturing process or in any other kind of work whatsoever incidental to or connected with the manufacturing process or connected with the subject of the manufacturing process, and not persons solely employed in a clerical capacity in any room or place where no manufacturing process is being carried on. The abovementioned provisions of the Factories Act do not, therefore, apply to clerical employees who are employed in any office room not connected with any manufacturing process, or to manual employees like durwans, malis, drivers and members of crews of boats and launches, and perhaps some others. Apart from the statutory holidays allowed to "workers" under the Factories Act the employers in jute mills generally allow six festival holidays in a year, presumably to all employees. As to the employees who do not come strictly within the category of "workers" under the Factories Act, there is no clear information before us, except that the Bansberia Mill Employees' Union which represents clerks, compounders and Gurkha durwans working in a particular mill, namely, the Ganges Manufacturing Co., Ltd., Bansberia, has placed before us some information about the existing leave rules applicable to the clerical staff in that particular concern. From the statement submitted by the Bansberia Mill Employees' Union, we gather that so far as the clerical staff is concerned, each employee is allowed twenty-one days' privilege leave on full pay in a calendar year, and on production of a medical certificate from the mill doctor, sick leave on full pay for fifteen days and on half pay for thirty days may be allowed in one year. It does not appear that any further data with regard to the employees in different mills, other than those who may be called "workers" under the Factories Act, have been made available to us. We are, however, asked by the different Unions to extend the privileges regarding leave and holidays to the extent which we have indicated above.

14(1). The Indian Jute Mills' Association, in its written statement, has admitted that this question of leave and holidays is a fit subject for being adjudicated upon by the Tribunal. In course of the hearing, however, Dr. Waight, Counsel for the Association, seemed to suggest that the Tribunal was not entitled to go beyond the provisions of the statute. In other words Dr. Waight has contended that the privileges regarding leave, etc., should be confined to what the Factories Act has already provided for and this matter should be left to the Legislature and the Tribunal should not interfere, and even cannot interfere. We are unable to accept any suggestion that the Tribunal is not empowered to make an award regarding leave and holidays, irrespective of the provisions of existing statutes. The demands in respect of leave and holidays have given rise to differences between the employers and the workmen, and these differences are obviously connected with the terms of employment and the conditions of labour, and therefore, they constitute industrial disputes. That being the position this Tribunal has ample jurisdiction to deal with the matter. The Tribunal of course will not interfere with the provisions of existing statutes, but there is absolutely no bar to the Tribunal's extending the privileges which the statutes confer, provided that such arrangements are not inconsistent with the statutory provisions. We are, therefore, of opinion that we are entitled to evolve a system of leave and holidays, which we may think to be just and proper under the particular circumstances. The only question is, what we shall consider to be just and proper from the points of view of various factors like the capacity of the industry to bear the extra burden, the standard of production, etc. While we are of opinion that privileges regarding leave and holidays should be extended as far as practicable, we cannot be unmindful of the position that such extension of privileges will throw an extra financial burden on the employers, and we must deal with the matter with some degree of caution. The question of the standard of production being affected by the facilities for leave has also to be borne in mind. After giving very careful thoughts, we have come to the conclusion that while the privileges should be extended to some extent, we should proceed cautiously and we feel that there is little room for very wide extension under the circumstances prevailing at present.

14(2). The statutory holidays for ten days in a year which would be available to "workers" under the Factories Act are more or less in the nature of privilege leave which has been demanded. Leaving aside the question of festival holidays for the present, we proceed to consider the subjects of privilege leave, casual leave and sick leave. Employees who come within the definition of "workers" under the Factories Act will of course get the ten days' statutory holidays in a year. But other employees are not entitled to these statutory holidays. In considering the subject of leave, therefore, the employees should be classified into some convenient categories. We think that it will be convenient to divide the employees into the following categories, namely, (1) manual and clerical "workers" under the Factories Act, (2) clerical employees employed in the office, (3) other manual and clerical employees. In our view the privileges of leave should be the same for both manual and clerical "workers" within the meaning of the Factories Act, as the functions of these two classes of workers are intimately interconnected. The clerical employees who are employed in the office do work which is more or less of a sedentary character and their case obviously stands on a somewhat different footing. Then there are manual employees like durwans, malis, drivers and others who do not come within the purview of the Factories Act but whose case should be considered in connection with the question of leave. There may also be clerical employees who are neither "workers" under the Factories Act nor clerks employed in the office.

14(3). We shall first take up the case of manual and clerical "workers" within the meaning of the Factories Act, that is to say, persons who work in the different sections of a jute mill including the engineering section. As we have already indicated these persons are entitled, under the Factories Act, to enjoy Sundays as holidays or other substituted holidays, and also to ten days' annual holidays which can be accumulated for two years. In the case of these employees, the question is how much more leave by way of additional privilege leave can be allowed consistently with the capacity of the industry to bear the extra burden and with the maintenance of a proper standard of production. We have come to the conclusion, after giving the most careful thought to the question, that for the present the maximum amount of privilege leave on full pay that can be allowed to the "workers" would be five days in a year, with option to accumulate the same for two years consistently with the present provisions of the Factories Act and we direct accordingly. We are unable to provide for any casual leave with pay in the case of these "workers". But casual leave without pay up to ten days in a year may be given to them, consistently with the Standing Orders, and casual leave will not be allowed to be accumulated. Certain observations of the Government of India Labour Investigation Committee on page 373 of the Main Report have attracted our attention. The observations are on the following lines:—"Firstly, as our surveys have shown, in the main centres of the principal factory industries of the country such as jute, cotton and engineering, a large proportion of the labour has their village homes in distant parts of the country entailing long journeys by rail, steam-ship and road. In such cases most of these holidays allowed by the Act are likely to be exhausted in the journeys alone. Such journeys entail considerable expenditure and the worker is not likely to undertake them unless he is sure of being able to stay in his village home at least for a fairly long period. Thus, to be beneficial from workers' point of view, the law must provide for accumulation of leave for a much longer period than 2 years, say, for 5 years. Secondly, if facilities are granted to extend such holidays with pay by permitting the workers to tack on holidays without pay for a further period which may be, say, twice as much as the holidays with pay due, and the worker is assured of his job on his return, such facilities would not entail any serious inconvenience". In these observations the necessity of some period of leave without pay in addition to leave, statutory or otherwise, with pay, has been emphasised. We agree with the view expressed by the Labour Investigation Committee, and as we feel that the privileges of leave for the "workers" which we have provided for in addition to the statutory holidays allowed by the Factories Act are not adequate to meet the needs of many "workers" who may be immigrants from distant places, we are of opinion that some provision for leave without pay should be made, so that the worker concerned may return after spending a substantial amount of leave to his work with confidence that he will be allowed automatically to return to his job. We, therefore, direct that in the case of "workers" within the meaning of the Factories Act, leave without pay up to fifteen days in a year should be allowed, and such leave should be allowed to be accumulated for 2 years.

14(4). We pass on now to consider the case of clerical employees employed in the office, who are not "workers" within the meaning of the Factories Act. These employees are not entitled to the statutory annual holidays provided for by the Factories Act. Their work is more or less of a sedentary character, and is largely allied to the work which clerks in an ordinary office usually do. It is presumed that these employees are given holidays on Sundays, although the Factories Act does not make any provision for them. We direct that clerical employees in the office should be given holidays on all Sundays, and if they are required to work on any Sunday, a substituted holiday, more or less on the lines indicated in the Factories Act, should be given. In our view, the amount of privilege leave admissible to clerical employees in the office should be on a better footing, and casual leave with pay should also be permissible for them. We direct that clerical employees in the office should be allowed privilege leave with full pay for twenty-one days in a year, and such leave should be allowed to be accumulated for three years, and they should also be allowed casual leave with full pay up to ten days in a calendar year, consistently with the Standing Orders, and casual leave should not be allowed to be accumulated.

14(5). Then comes the question of manual employees who are not "workers" within the meaning of the Factories Act and possibly some clerical employees who are neither "workers" within the meaning of the Factories Act nor clerks employed in the office. In the case of these employees who may be described as "other manual and clerical employees", we direct that they shall be allowed privilege leave with full pay for fifteen days in a year, and such leave shall be allowed to be accumulated for two years. We do not make any provision for casual leave with pay for such employees but they may be allowed casual leave without pay up to ten days in a year on the same lines as in the case of "workers" within the meaning of the Factories Act. These employees shall also be given holidays on Sundays or substituted holidays on the lines of the Factories Act.

14(6). The next point relates to the subject of sick leave. We find ourselves unable to accept the suggestions of the Unions in this respect for the present. We feel, however, that some sort of provision for sick leave should be made, and we direct that with regard to employees of all descriptions, sick leave on half pay up to fifteen days in a year shall be allowed, on the basis of a medical certificate from the medical officer of the mill or from a qualified and registered medical practitioner approved by the mill authorities. This direction, however, will hold good till the Employees' State Insurance Act of 1948 comes into full operation, that is to say, till the "sickness benefit" as provided for by section 49 of that Act becomes actually available to the employees.

14(7). The next subject for our consideration relates to festival holidays. It is understood that in the Jute Textile Industry the authorities of all mills are already allowing festival holidays for six days in a year to all categories of employees. This practice is quite independent of the provisions of the Factories Act, and in introducing it the employers have obviously appreciated the need of greater scope for rest and recreation for the employees. We understand that at present festival holidays are usually given on the following lines, that is to say, two days for Durga Puja, one day for Doljatra or Holi, one day for Id-ul-fitr, one day for Id-uz-zoha, and one day for Muharram. We have considered the various demands put forward by the Unions with regard to further extension of festival holidays. We do not think that consistently with the question of maintenance of a proper standard of production we can provide for a larger number of festival holidays to the extent desired by the Unions under present circumstances. We have, however, decided to increase the number of festival holidays to eight from six in a year. We direct that all jute mills with which we are concerned shall allow the following festival holidays in a year to all categories of employees, namely, two days for Durga Puja, one day for Doljatra or Holi, one day for Kali Puja or Diwali, one day for Id-ul-fitr, one day for Id-uz-zoha, one day for Muharram, and one day for Fateha Duazdaham.

14(8). On behalf of the Unions the question has been raised that when an employee is made to work on a holiday he should be given double wages for that day and also a substituted holiday. This principle is sought by the Unions to be applied to Sundays, to statutory annual holidays and also to festival holidays. As regards Sundays, the Factories Act lays down with regard to "workers" that they must be given as holidays, or in cases where that cannot be done, substituted holidays must be given. With regard to holidays of this nature we do not agree that the claim for double wages is really justified. The statutory annual holidays, when asked for by the employee concerned, must be given by the employer at some time or other. We therefore do not agree that there is any justification for the demand regarding double wages in respect of these statutory holidays. The question of an employee being made to work on a festival holiday, however, stands on a different footing. The significance of a festival holiday is lost when an employee is made to work on the day of the festival. It is understood that at present when such an arrangement happens, the employee is paid double wages for the day or in the alternative is given a substituted holiday. In our view this arrangement is not unfair, and we direct that when an employee is made to work on a festival holiday he should be given double wages for the day, or a substituted holiday, according to the employee's choice.

14(9). It is now necessary to define the expression "leave on full pay", and "leave on half pay". As regards the statutory annual holidays under section 49B of the Factories Act, employees governed by that Act will be entitled to pay for the annual holidays in accordance with section 49C of the Act. The question of full pay arises with regard to the additional privilege leave for manual and clerical "workers" within the meaning of the Factories Act, the privilege leave for twenty-one days with regard to clerical employees employed in the office and privilege leave for fifteen days with regard to other manual and clerical employees, and also with regard to casual leave for those who are entitled to such leave with full pay under our award.

The question of half pay arises, under our award, with reference to sick leave. With regard to this matter we give the following directions:—"Full pay" shall mean wages at a rate equivalent to the daily average of the employee's basic wages for the days on which he actually worked during the preceding three months, exclusive of any earnings in respect of over-time, plus the full amount of dearness allowance proper as defined in our award under Issue No. 6, and shall also include the privilege of drawing rations at concession prices or the cash equivalent of such food concession, whichever may be applicable, as determined by us in our award under Issue No. 6, provided that the privilege of food concession or of the cash equivalent will be available only if the employee concerned does not leave the locality in which he ordinarily resides while on duty. "Half pay" shall mean wages at a rate equivalent to half of the daily average of the employee's basic wages for the days on which he actually worked during the preceding three months, exclusive of any earnings in respect of over-time, plus the full amount of dearness allowance proper as defined in our award under Issue No. 6, and shall also include the privilege of drawing rations at concession prices or the cash equivalent of such food concession, whichever may be applicable, as determined by us in our award under Issue No. 6, provided that the privilege of food concession or of the cash equivalent will be available only if the employee concerned does not leave the locality in which he ordinarily resides while on duty.

14(10). It is possible that in some mills, particularly with regard to clerical employees, the privileges of leave and holidays which we have directed to be allowed under our award, may be on a lower level than those actually being allowed at present. For instance, in the Ganges Jute Mill at Bansberia, we are told, sick leave is granted to clerical employees to the extent of fifteen days on full pay and thirty days on half pay in one year. Circumstances of this character which may prevail in other concerns may not have been brought to our notice. We do not desire that any privilege regarding leave of any character which we have allowed in our award in respect of employees of different kinds in a general way should prove detrimental to any employee or class of employees at any place. We, therefore, direct that if any employee or employees in any particular jute mill are enjoying privileges of leave or holidays of any character which are better than those which we have provided for the existing privileges must continue.

14(11). After having disposed of the items of leave and holidays under items (a) and (c) under Issue No. 13, we now proceed to consider the question of maternity leave under item (b). The Jute Mill Workers' Federation has demanded maternity leave for three months. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour has asked for one month before and forty days after confinement. The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union has demanded twelve weeks' maternity leave. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has generally supported the claim of the Federation. On behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association it has been contended that there is already a statute in operation with regard to this subject, namely, the Bengal Maternity Benefit Act IV of 1939. Section 4 of that Act runs as follows:—(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, every woman employed in a factory shall be entitled to, and her employer shall be liable for, the payment of maternity benefit at the rate of her average daily earnings calculated to the nearest quarter of an anna in the manner provided in the sub-section (2) or at the rate of eight annas a day, whichever is greater, for the actual days of her absence, which shall include holidays and non-working days during the period of four weeks immediately preceding and including the day of her delivery and for the four weeks immediately following that day: provided that a woman shall not be entitled to maternity benefit unless she has been employed in the factory of the employer from whom she claims maternity benefit for a period of not less than nine months immediately preceding the day of her delivery. (2) The average daily earnings referred to in sub-section (1) shall be calculated by dividing the total wages earned by the woman during the three months immediately preceding the date on which she gives notice under sub-section (1) of section 5 by the actual number of days on which she worked during that period." Section 5(1) of the Bengal Maternity Benefit Act runs as follows:—"Any woman entitled to maternity benefit under the provisions of this Act,—(a) who is pregnant may, on any day, give notice either orally in person or in writing in the form prescribed by rules made under this Act to the manager of the factory that she expects to be confined within one month next following and may therein nominate a person for purposes of section 6, (b) who has not given the notice referred to in clause (a) and has been delivered of a child, shall within seven days, give similar notice that she has given birth to a child." We have carefully considered these provisions of the Bengal Maternity Benefit Act in the light of the claims put forward by the different Unions on the subject of maternity leave. The question before us is whether the matter really calls for our going beyond those provisions under the present circumstances. The course of legislation in this direction has proceeded still further since the Bengal Maternity Benefit Act was enacted. We have now the Employees' State Insurance Act of 1948, and section 50 of that Act has provided for maternity benefit of a substantial character under a scheme of insurance. Section 50(2) of the Employees' State Insurance Act runs as follows:—"Subject to the provisions of this Act, and the regulations, if any, an insured woman who is qualified to claim maternity benefit in accordance with sub-section (1) shall be entitled to receive it at the rate of twelve annas a day for all days on which she does not work for remuneration during a period of twelve weeks of which not more than six shall precede the expected date of confinement." It further appears from section 61 of the Employees' State Insurance Act that when a woman is entitled to any maternity benefit provided by that Act, she shall not be entitled to receive any similar benefit admissible under the provisions of any other enactment like the Bengal Maternity Benefit Act. The result is that when the Employees' State Insurance Act comes into full operation in respect of a particular woman, she will not be entitled to receive any benefit under the Bengal Maternity Benefit Act, and will be entitled only to such maternity benefit as will be available under the Employees' State Insurance Act. In this state of things we consider it to be totally inexpedient to introduce any different scheme of maternity leave or benefit with regard to women employees who may be employed in a particular industry, namely, the Jute Textile Industry. We have, therefore, decided that there should be no deviation under the present circumstances from the provisions of the Bengal Maternity Benefit Act or of the Employees' State Insurance Act, when the latter Act comes into operation. We, therefore, direct that maternity leave or maternity benefit should be given in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Maternity Benefit Act of 1939 for the time being, or in accordance with the provisions of the Employees' State Insurance Act of 1948 when the latter Act comes into actual operation.

14(12). One other question has been raised in course of the hearing and it relates to a provision for sickness leave in consequence of a miscarriage. A miscarriage is certainly not a delivery within the meaning of section 4 of the Bengal Maternity Benefit Act, and therefore, a woman worker who has miscarried is not entitled to any benefit under that Act. The case of a miscarriage, therefore, stands on an entirely different footing and there is no statutory provision for meeting such a case. During the hearing, Dr. Waight, Counsel for the Indian Jute Mills' Association, has admitted that a miscarriage may cause a considerable amount of sickness, and he has conceded that the Association is prepared to allow sick leave on full pay, in such a case up to a maximum of two months after the date of miscarriage, on the basis of a proper medical certificate. As the matter has been thus conceded and agreed to by the Unions, during the hearing, we give the following directions. In the case of a miscarriage, sickness leave on full pay shall be allowed to a woman worker up to a maximum of two months after the date of misacrriage, on the basis of a medical certificate from the medical officer of the mill concerned or from a qualified and registered medical practitioner approved by the mill authorities. The expression "full pay" in this connection shall have the same meaning as we have already defined in an earlier part of our award under this issue. This direction will continue to have effect only till the provisions of the Employees' State Insurance Act, 1948, with regard to sickness benefit come into operation.

ISSUE No. 14.—Provision for Provident Fund, Gratuity and Pension.

15. We next pass on to consider the subject of provision for provident fund, gratuity and pension under Issue No. 14. We shall first state briefly the nature of the demands put forward by the different Unions. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation has demanded simultaneous benefits in respect of provident fund, gratuity and pension. It has been suggested that the present scheme of pension introduced by the Indian Jute Mills' Association should continue with certain modifications by way of improvement in the interest of the workmen. The Federation has also urged the introduction of a contributory provident fund, the rate of contribution by the employee and the employer being 8⅓ per cent. of the basic wages. In addition to a pension scheme and a contributory provident fund, the Federation claims the simultaneous introduction of a system of gratuity, to the extent of one month's pay for each year of service to be deposited in the employee's contributory provident fund account. In course of the hearing the learned Advocate for the Federation submitted that in so far as it was realised that the benefit of the present pension scheme was not available to a substantial number of workmen, if he was asked to make a preference, he would prefer a scheme of provident fund combined with a scheme for gratuity to a scheme for pension. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has not supported any pension scheme at all and has urged that the present scheme for pension may be replaced immediately by (a) a provident fund scheme on the basis of equal contributions of 12½ per cent. by the employer and the worker and (b) a gratuity system on the basis of one month's wages for every year of service put in. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour has also put forward, in its statement, a claim for schemes for gratuity and provident fund and no pension. The spokesman of the Chamber of Labour, in course of the hearing, pressed for gratuity alone, deprecating both provident fund and pension, on the ground that both of these would be ineffective owing to conditions of insecurity of service. The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union has asked for a system of pension as well as that of a provident fund. The Bansberia Jute Mill Employees' Union has demanded pension and gratuity. The Indian Jute Mills' Association has contended in its written statement that this subject of retiral benefits is essentially a matter for consideration by the State, in so far as a subject of provision against old age and for the workman's family is a matter for the State and the Legislature to consider, and it is not a fit subject to be adjudicated upon by this Tribunal.

15(1). Before we proceed any further to deal with the subject-matter of the present issue, it is necessary to dispose of a point of law bearing on the question of our jurisdiction which has been raised by the learned Counsel for the Indian Jute Mills' Association in course of the hearing. On behalf of the Association it has been conceded that a dispute regarding both provident fund and pension is an industrial dispute within the meaning of section 2(k) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, and, therefore, this Tribunal is competent to adjudicate upon the claims for pension and provident fund. It has, however, been seriously contended that the claim for gratuity does not constitute an industrial dispute and consequently this Tribunal has no jurisdiction to deal with it. The line of argument adopted by the learned Counsel on behalf of the Association was practically the same as was done with regard to the question of bonus under Issue No. 7, which we have already disposed of in our Award. The contention is that the payment of gratuity is a matter of grace, and it cannot conceivably be said to be connected with terms of employment or with the conditions of labour so as to make a dispute regarding gratuity an industrial dispute. We do not consider it necessary to go elaborately into this aspect of the point of law regarding our jurisdiction, inasmuch as we have already dealt with a similar subject in course of our Award with regard to Issue No. 7, and we hold that the reasoning we have given while considering that issue will apply to our conclusion with regard to the question of gratuity under the present issue also. We unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that a claim for gratuity is connected with the terms of employment, just in the same way as a claim for pension or for a provident fund. We have no doubt that the entire claim involved in the present issue is an industrial dispute and we have ample jurisdiction to deal with every aspect of the claim.

15(2). It will be useful at this stage to give a picture of the present state of things relating to the matter under our consideration. We may first refer to certain observations made by Royal Commission on Labour in India (1931), on page 269 of its Report, which run as follows:—"Industrial life tends to break down the joint family system. Those workers, who, at the beginning of their industrial career own a plot of land, are often unable to retain possession, and with the passage of years the connection with the village becomes loosened. Workers in the main are unable to save out of their low earnings against old age. Those in intimate touch with the life of the workers know something of the misery in which many pass their old age. The necessity for making some provision against old age needs no emphasis. A few employers, railway administrations and Government Departments have made provision for some of their workers, either by means of a provident fund or by instituting a system of pensions. It is appreciated that in this report it is impossible to make provision for meeting every contingency in the life of the worker, but the importance of this matter being generally admitted, they feel it incumbent to recommend that, until such time as it is found practicable to institute either a general scheme of old age pensions or provident funds for industrial workers, Government should, wherever possible, encourage employers, by financial grants or other means to inaugurate schemes of this nature for their employees." We may next refer to certain passages relating to pension and gratuity schemes on page 33 of Sri S. R. Deshpande's Report on an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India (1946), which run as follows:—"Out of the 101 jute mills in Bengal, only about 22 mills have made some provision for the future of their operatives. This takes the form either of granting old age pensions and/or gratuities. The conditions attached to the grant of pensions and gratuities vary from concern to concern and no worker seems entitled to them only by the nature of the length of his service alone. The maximum period of service fixed by most of the mills is 30 years. In one concern only it was found that 15 years' service was a qualifying period for pension or gratuity. In order to qualify for a pension or a gratuity, apart from length of service, the workers have to fulfil conditions, such as loyalty, spotless character, incapacitation for further work, etc. Before applying for a gratuity or pension workers have to appear before a medical officer of the factory and the decision of the medical officer is final. The scale of gratuity varies from mill to mill. Some mills pay to their workers, by way of gratuity, two weeks' earnings for each year of service." We may further quote certain observations made by the Government of India Labour Investigation Committee on pages 360-361 of the Main Report (1946), which run as follows:—"The whole problem of provision against old age or death of bread-winners legitimately falls within the sphere of social security and it is a matter for consideration whether either the initiation or management of schemes of provident fund, gratuity and pensions should be left to employers themselves. Of course, so long as there are no schemes of social security introduced in a particular industry or area, the existing private schemes of provident fund, etc., should be allowed to continue under the management of employers. The existing schemes in this connection do not appear to be very liberal, and especially in regard to the employers' contribution to provident funds of workers the restrictions on withdrawal of employers' contribution seem to be somewhat unsatisfactory. If provision against old age or death of bread-winner is intended to stabilise the industrial worker in employment, the employers' contribution, which is really in consideration for permanent service by the worker, should as far as possible be made available to him on early retirement, etc. The absence of social security measures like provident funds, gratuities and pensions in most concerns has largely contributed to the migratory character of Indian labour, and is one of the most important causes of the large labour turnover in factories. ....A few employers have instituted gratuity and pension schemes. The amount of gratuity generally amounts to half a month's wages for every complete year of service put in. In almost all the cases gratuity is payable only to deserving workers of proved good behaviour, the sole judge of the deservedness being the employer himself. Hence there is always scope for discrimination, and the trade unions bitterly complain that their members are discriminated against. The rate of the gratuity is progressively reduced if the period of service is less than 20 years. Pension schemes are operated by a very few concerns. The grant of pensions is entirely at the discretion of the employer and the amount is generally small."

15(3). After having referred to certain observations on the subject to be found in different reports of investigation, we may turn our attention to the system of pension which has been introduced by the Indian Jute Mills' Association since the year 1946. The Association's spokesmen have strenuously urged the retention of the pension scheme, with certain modifications by way of improvement, if necessary. Let us now examine what this pension scheme is. The scheme appears to have been circularised by the Association by a communication, dated the 14th January 1946. In the Circular the Committee of the Association has considered various arguments in favour of a system of monthly pensions, and has come to the conclusion that no other form of provision for old age is suitable. Some of the main features of the Association's pension scheme are on the following lines:—

"The pension scheme should apply to all classes of mill workers, except clerks and others employed on a monthly basis and receiving the benefit of a provident fund.

The qualifying period of service for the pension should be determined by the date of employment and the date of retiral recorded in the mills' records.

To qualify for a pension, service must be continuous in one mill, unless as a result of individual arrangements transfer of service within groups under the same managing agents is permitted. Continuity of service is not affected by periods of leave taken with the permission of the managements in writing, but any employee who absents himself or herself from work without permission from the management in writing, or for reasons not recognised and accepted by the management as valid, is liable to forfeit any previous period of service which counts as a qualification for the pension. In such a case the new qualifying period will commence from the date on which the employee resumes work after the break in service.

A worker who has completed not less than ten years' unbroken service, and who is certified by the mill company's doctor to be medically unfit for further work through causes outside his control, may receive a proportionate pension on compassionate grounds, and at the sole discretion of the management.

An employee who has been paid a pension, will have that fact recorded in his or her service book, and will be debarred from further employment in any mill in the membership of the Indian Jute Mills' Association.

The period of service which will qualify for a grant of a pension should be 25 years' service in the case of women, and 30 years' service in the case of men, with a minimum retiring age of 50 and 55 years respectively.

The Committee's unanimous recommendation is that the rate of pension should be Rs.10 per month on the basis of the period of service indicated above."

It is noticeable that practically speaking all the Unions have either condemned the existing pension scheme or have refrained from supporting it. On the other hand, the Indian Jute Mills' Association has insisted on the retention of the pension scheme, with certain modifications, if found necessary. With regard to the question of improvement, the following suggestions have been made, in course of the hearing, on behalf of the Association :—

(a) In case of death of a worker who has retired after 30 years' continuous service, payment should be made to the dependants of the balance of pension for a period of 10 years after the worker's retirement.

(b) If a worker dies after 25 years' continuous service, his dependants should be paid proportionate pension for a period of 10 years.

(c) Every employee should be entitled to nominate somebody to receive the pension.

15(4). We shall proceed to examine the pension scheme in the light of the improvements suggested on behalf of the Association. It is noticeable that no change in the amount of pension to the extent of Rs.10 per month is suggested. Further even according to the improved scheme suggested the dependants of a deceased worker will not get any benefit unless the worker will have completed at least 25 years' continuous service. Our attention has been drawn to the observations made by the Central Pay Commission in the concluding lines of paragraph 189 of its Report, in which the Commission has advocated a system of pension. We would observe, however, that every scheme must be judged on its own merits with reference to the particular employees in question, and no scheme can be considered to be of universal applicability. In the very nature of things we must consider the scheme of pension in the light of the particular circumstances prevailing in the Jute Textile Industry. Apart from the question that the amount of pension allowed at present is rather meagre, it appears that there are factors to indicate that the benefit from the present scheme of pension is available to a very small number of workers, who may perhaps be called a microscopic minority. In our opinion, a benefit, to be of any effective use, must be available to the generality of workers and not to a microscopic section. The conditions of work prevailing in the Jute Textile Industry have their own peculiarities. The Association's pension scheme aims at making a pension available to a male worker only after he has rendered 30 years' continuous service, with a minimum retiring age of 55 years. We wonder how many workers in the history of the Jute Textile Industry have actually completed 30 years' continuous service, as we cannot fail to notice the large turnover prevailing in this industry. In this connection we may usually refer to the table given on page 11 of Sri S. R. Deshpande's Report on an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India (1946) in connection with the subject of length of service. It appears that figures were obtained from 19 jute mills, and the investigation indicated that the percentage of workers who had served above 10 years was only 13·51. This figure is also to be found in table 39 on page 97 of the Main Report of the Labour Investigation Committee. Unfortunately, the investigation carried out at that time did not aim at ascertaining the percentage of workers who had rendered service for more than 20 years or 25 years, or up to 30 years. We do not find any reason to doubt the correctness of the figures which we find in the above Reports. In course of the hearing a statement of the results of investigation in a similar direction carried out by Mr. Sutherland, Deputy Secretary of the Indian Jute Mills' Association, was submitted to the Tribunal, and the figures of percentage of workers who had rendered more than 20 years' service in five specified mills were stated to be as follows:—21 per cent. in Gouripore Mill, 9 per cent. in Nuddea Mill, 37 per cent. in Budge Budge Mill, 40 per cent. in Delta Mill, and 34 per cent. in National Mill. We are not sure whether these five selected mills can be held to be of a representative character with regard to the matter under investigation, and the manner in which these five specific mills were selected for carrying out the investigation is unknown to us. Unfortunately, the figures submitted with reference to Mr. Sutherland's investigation in respect of only five selected mills do not indicate the number of workers who have actually reached the stage of 30 years' continuous service. It is agreed by the spokesmen of the Association that there is no age prescribed for entry into the service of a jute mill and that any arrangement with regard to an age of entry being prescribed is impracticable under the conditions prevailing in the Jute Textile Industry. That being the position, it is extremely doubtful whether a scheme of pension depending on a retiring age or a number of years of service is feasible or effective. We think that the scheme of pension as it stands now, or even in an improved form, as suggested by the Association, is more or less ineffective in so far as the benefit is not likely to be available to a substantial proportion of the workers. Then there is another factor and that is that very few persons manage to live for a substantial number of years after earning a pension, even if they have managed to render 30 years' continuous service. We are not unmindful of the arguments advanced on behalf of the Association to the effect that some workers are likely to dissipate their funds when substantial funds are received by them in a lump by way of provident fund accumulations or gratuities and therefore a pension scheme affords the most suitable form of retiral benefits in the case of Jute Textile Industry workers. There are pros and cons with regard to this aspect of the argument and we are not convinced that the line of argument advanced on behalf of the Association can be accepted as the last word on the subject. There is the question of indebtedness of a substantial character with regard to industrial workers generally, and sometimes it may be helpful for a worker, on his retirement, to be able to get rid of the accumulated indebtedness with the help of substantial funds which may be available under a system of provident fund or of a gratuity. On a consideration of all aspects of the question, and on weighing all the advantages and disadvantages, we have come to the unhesitating conclusion that the present scheme of pension is quite unsuitable to meet the needs of the workers in the Jute Textile Industry in so far as it is not giving and is not likely to give, in spite of slight improvements, any tangible benefit to a mentionable proportion of the workers. We, therefore, direct that the scheme of pension now obtaining in the Jute Textile Industry be discontinued forthwith. This direction, however, will not, in any way, affect those workers who have earned or may earn pensions under the existing system before our award comes into operation. Every such worker will be entitled only to the pension earned, and not to any other retiral benefit.

15(5). After having discarded the existing pension system we have naturally to turn our attention to the proposals for introducing a provident fund system and a system of gratuity. We have carefully examined all aspects of the matters involved, and we have come to the conclusion that a contributory provident fund system is the most suitable arrangement in so far as the benefit of such a system will be available to every workman who fulfils the necessary conditions. We have also considered the question of an additional retiral benefit in the shape of a gratuity. We are fixing the rate of contribution with regard to provident fund at 6¼ per cent. of the basic wages, and we find that it is difficult to be satisfied that the different units in the Jute Textile Industry will all have the capacity to bear the burden of an additional retiral benefit in the shape of a gratuity. In our view the units in the industry should be given an opportunity to adjust themselves to a system of provident fund in the first instance, and time is not yet ripe to introduce a simultaneous system of gratuity by way of additional benefit. We do not say that the two benefits of provident fund and gratuity cannot co-exist. But all that we say is that the whole matter should be examined in the light of experience with reference to the capacity of the different units to bear the burden imposed and progress in the direction of retiral benefits should be of a gradual character, and it is not desirable to impose a sudden heavy burden in the first instance. At the same time, we are not unmindful of the position that a provident fund system is yet to come into being in accordance with our award, and the companies concerned will presumably take a little time in introducing the provident fund system in accordance with our direction, and apart from this factor, old employees who have served in a particular concern for a substantial period will not get as much benefit from the provident fund system as new entrants would, in so far as old employees will have passed many years of their service without any provident fund benefit at all. The question, therefore, seriously arises for our consideration as to what should be done to meet the cases of such old employees as distinguished from new entrants. On giving careful consideration to the matter we have come to the conclusion that a system of gratuity, which should be more or less of a complementary character, should be introduced to meet the needs of old employees and also of employees in general under circumstances of death, retirement on account of superannuation on medical grounds, etc. We want to make it clear that the system of gratuity we are going to introduce does not involve any additional benefit apart from the benefit arising from the provident fund system. That being the position, this system of gratuity will not impose any extra burden on the employer. We have considered the question as to what should be the rate of gratuity. The Unions appearing before us have asked for gratuity, as an additional benefit, at the rate of one month's wages for every completed year of service. We have examined these proposals from the point of view of the capacity of the industry and of the different units constituting the industry, particularly of those which may be called marginal units, to bear the burden, and we have come to the conclusion that it is not desirable under the present circumstances to fix the gratuity at a rate of one month's wages for every year of service, and it would be advisable to adopt a more cautious scheme and to fix the gratuity, which would of course be of a complementary and not additional character, at the rate of half a month's wages for every completed year of service. It may be argued that a rate of half a month's wages for every year of service means 1/24th of the annual wages, while the employer's contribution of 6¼ per cent. of the wages to the provident fund of a particular employee would amount to a benefit to the extent of 1/16th of the annual wages, and thus an old employee, who would, under the arrangement determined by us, be entitled to a gratuity and, therefore, to a benefit to the extent of 1/24th of the wages, would be at a disadvantage in comparison with a recently employed workman who would be entitled to a benefit to the extent of 1/16th of the wages under the provident fund system. We may answer this difficulty, at least to some extent, by pointing out that under the system of gratuity which we are going to introduce, the rate of wages on the basis of which gratuity will be calculated will be the average basic wages during the last 12 months of service on full wages, and thus the deficiency in the benefit from gratuity, as compared with the benefit from the provident fund system, will be neutralised to a great extent. We find it is not practicable to evolve any method of absolute equalisation, and we are satisfied that the arrangements regarding provident fund and gratuity which we are going to make will be fair to all concerned from the practical point of view.

15(6). It is not necessary for us to dilate any further on the details of the Provident Fund scheme we have adopted, as the Rules of Provident Fund set forth in Appendix X, which will form a part of our award, will speak for themselves. It may be mentioned that the Rules of Provident Fund have been adapted, with certain modifications, from the Model Rules relating to Provident Fund for Industrial Employees framed by the Government of India. We direct that the employers in respect of the jute mills concerned in this reference shall introduce the contributory provident fund system defined in Appendix X within four months from the date of publication of this award.

15(7). In the meantime the following system of gratuity in respect of all employees shall come into operation in place of the existing system of pension which has been directed to be discontinued forthwith. The provisions of the system of gratuity shall be as follows:—

(1) On retirement after continuous service for not less than fifteen years—Gratuity at the rate of half a month's basic wages for each completed year of service subject to a maximum of fifteen months' basic wages.

(2) On retirement before completing fifteen years' service by reason of superannuation on medical grounds or owing to any other sufficient cause approved by the employer in this behalf—Gratuity at the rate of half a month's basic wages for each completed year of service.

(3) On death—Gratuity at the rate of half a month's basic wages for each completed year of service (payable to the employee's nominee or nominees or heirs), subject to a maximum of fifteen months' basic wages.

(4) The basis of calculating gratuity shall be the average basic wages, not including over-time wages or any allowances, bonuses or other benefits, during the last twelve months of service on full wages.

(5) For the period for which the Provident Fund has been in operation in respect of an employee, he or his nominee or nominees or heirs will receive the whole amount at his credit in the Fund, including the amount of the employer's contribution, subject to the operation of rule 13 of the Provident Fund Rules as regards deductions; but in calculating the number of years of service for which gratuity will be payable, the period for which the Provident Fund has been in operation in respect of the particular employee shall be deducted from the total period of service.

15(8). We make it clear that the rules regarding provident fund which we have framed shall apply not only to manual workmen, but also to clerical workmen, but if in a particular case any workman is already enjoying a provident fund benefit involving a scale of employer's contribution to the extent of more than 6¼ per cent., the existing scale shall be maintained. We further make it clear that the rules regarding gratuity shall apply to all workmen both manual and clerical, but if in a particular case there exists a benefit of gratuity which, according to the employee concerned, is more beneficial than the system we have directed, he shall be given the option of the existing system being continued. These directions have been necessitated by the position that the information about clerical employees, in particular, placed before us, has been very meagre.

ISSUE No. 15.—Housing and House Allowance.

16. The next subject for our consideration relates to housing and house allowance under Issue No. 15. It will be useful at the outset to set forth briefly the claims put forward by the Unions appearing before the Tribunal, and the view put forward by the Indian Jute Mills' Association on behalf of the employers. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation has demanded that the present scheme of quarters for the habitation of workers should be so revised as to provide in every apartment two bed-rooms with a verandah and a separate cook-shed with a chimney, and that every room should have a door and two windows and there should be pipe-water and electricity. The Federation has asked for the abolition of the back-to-back huts with no windows which constitute the vast majority of the workers' houses at the present moment. The Federation has not demanded any house allowance. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has similarly condemned the back-to-back huts and has demanded the preparation by the Government in consultation with the employers and workers' representatives of a comprehensive housing scheme for the jute mill labour, which may be financed by Government subsidy as well as by a special fund to which the employers should contribute in the shape of a levied cess. The Union has pressed for a house allowance to the extent of Rs.10 per month for each worker during the interim period. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour has demanded that the employers should be asked to prepare a housing scheme in consultation with the Provincial Government and representatives of labour, and meanwhile a house allowance of Rs.10 per month for each worker should be granted. The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union has asked for housing accommodation in general or in the alternative a house allowance of Rs.10 per month. The Bansberia Jute Mill Employees' Union has pressed for adequate house allowance. The Indian Jute Mills' Association has contended that there is no real dispute as regards the question that the present system of housing for industrial labour connected with the Jute Textile Industry is quite unsatisfactory, and there is considerable room for improvement. The Association however contends that this matter is not really a fit subject for consideration by the Tribunal, in so far as it has been settled in Tripartite Conferences, comprising representatives of the Central and Provincial Governments and of the employers and the employees, that the provision of housing for industrial labour would not be made an obligation on the employers alone, although they might have to conform to certain standards of accommodation and sanitation, and it has been further settled that at the most this matter could involve the joint responsibility of the State and the employers, and it was for the State to take the initiative and formulate necessary schemes under which the degree and nature of the responsibility imposed on the employers would be clearly defined. The Association contends that there is no objection to a suitable levy being imposed on the employers towards the fulfilment of the end contemplated. It is pointed out by the Association that the employers have provided accommodation for the workers as far as they could, and at present one-third of the entire labour force in the industry is housed in quarters provided by the employers, and apart from the absence of formulation of any definite workable scheme by the State, further progress in the matter of provision for housing accommodation could not be made owing to lack of space and dearth of building materials. The Association has generally opposed the idea of any house allowance being granted to the workers, in so far as the scales of wages would comprise within themselves an element of the cost of housing accommodation, and further it would be useless to grant any house allowance unless and until houses of the proper type are actually available either within the precincts of the mills or outside.

16(1). At this stage we may try to draw a picture of the housing conditions which prevailed in the jute mill areas a few years ago and which persist even to-day. The extremely miserable condition of housing accommodation has been observed by different Commissions and Committees which have been appointed to investigate the labour conditions in this country from time to time. As early as 1918-19 the Indian Industrial Commission urged the importance of improving the conditions of health and housing of the industrial workers. The Royal Commission on Labour in India started its labours in 1929 and in its Report (1931), at page 270-73 it has drawn a lurid picture of the housing conditions which were noticed at the time. About the employers' schemes in the jute mill areas the Royal Commission observed, among other things, as follows:—"It has been estimated that between 30 and 40 per cent. of the total labour force in these areas is housed by the various Companies. Most of these houses are built in back-to-back rows and consist of one room with a verandah in front in which cooking and washing is done. In the better lines the space between the rows is paved with brick and drained. Windows and roof ventilation are also provided in some types, whilst artificial lighting has been provided to a number of lines.................... The municipalities however have failed to make adequate use of the powers they possessed under the Bengal Municipal Act for the improvement of private bustees. While much has been done, the general problem of the housing of the workers is still unsolved. The majority remain unprovided with decent dwellings, and the houses built by the mills are in marked contrast to those in the bustees lying around. Owing to the rapid and extensive development of industries in Calcutta and Howrah areas, land for housing has become scarce and commands extraordinarily high prices. The workers have for long found it difficult to obtain adequate housing accommodation and to meet their needs private landlords, often mill sardars, erect houses and huts in the neighbourhood of the mills and let these at rents so high as to absorb a considerable proportion of the workers' earnings. Little or no consideration being given to the amenities of life, every available foot of land has been gradually built upon until the degree of overcrowding and congestion, particularly in certain parts of Howrah is probably unequalled in any other industrial area in India." The Royal Commission made elaborate recommendations for improvement of housing conditions of labour and specified the roles of Government, local bodies, employers and co-operative societies in respect of industrial housing. In pursuance of these recommendations the Land Acquisition Act was amended in 1933 to enable an industrial concern employing 100 and more workers to acquire land for housing of labour. The Government of India Labour Investigation Committee observes that the housing conditions noted by the Royal Commission on Labour have remained unaltered even at the time of the Committee's investigation in 1944-45, and on pages 295-96 of the Committee's Report it states that "very little by way of providing more and better houses for industrial labour has been done either by Government or municipalities". A general picture of the conditions prevailing in 1945-46 will be available from Sri S. R. Deshpande's Report of an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India on pages 29 to 31. The following passages may be usefully quoted from Deshpande's book, in order to indicate the conditions of housing prevailing in recent times:—"The accommodation provided by individual employers varies widely from mill to mill both in regard to the number provided as also in relation to the number of workers employed in each mill. As compared to the pre-war period the position in regard to the housing provided by the employers has not materially altered except that a few mills have added a few rooms and quarters for the workers and effected some improvements in the designs. Information obtained by the Association from 61 mills shows that the percentage of workers housed by individual mills varies from 7·9 to 100....... The housing accommodation supplied by 61 mills is either of the pucca or kutcha type............ Figures obtained during the present enquiry from 19 units providing housing accommodation to their workers show that only 39 per cent. of the total labour force in these units was housed by the employers. When there are private bustees round about the mills, the employers do not generally make any housing arrangements for their workers. Some of the mills situated outside Calcutta, however, have provided housing for about 50 per cent. of their employees as no private housing was easily available. The housing provided by the employers is usually of the barrack back-to-back type of quarter. The floor area of the quarters varies from a minimum of 67·8 square feet to a maximum of 110·6 square feet. Every type of quarter has a small verandah about 3 feet wide, a portion of which is used as a kitchen. It is seen that in nearly 94 per cent. of the cases, the floor space available to a worker and his family is less than 100 square feet. The rooms are also generally badly lighted and ventilation is altogether inadequate. Any comment on overcrowding and congestion is unnecessary............ Those not supplied with employers' housing live in bustees which have practically no plinth and are liable to be flooded during the rainy season............ The dimensions of some of the rooms inspected were either 6 feet by 8 feet or 8 feet by 8 feet. The surroundings were most filthy." It is unnecessary to quote any further extracts from different reports for the purpose of drawing a picture of the miserable housing conditions which still persist. We shall only supplement what we have referred to above by making some comments on what we ourselves observed in course of our inspection of certain jute mills. In the Bengal Jute Mill at Shibpur, Howrah, we inspected the workers' lines. which were back-to-back huts of an extremely miserable type, and we found that there was very little of ventilation and practically no day light in the small rooms which constituted these cooly lines. We arer perfectly convinced that this type of housing deserves the highest condemnation, and we feel that the sooner this type of dwelling for workers is abolished the better for all concerned. It is no wonder that the Unions are crying hoarse on the question of proper housing for industrial workers. In the jute mill of the Birla Jute Manufacturing Company, at Birlapur, however, we saw a state of things which was in pleasing contrast to our experience in the Bengal Jute Mill. At Birlapur we saw workers' quarters of a much improved type. These were pucca structures, there being single-room quarters and double-room quarters. Each room in the quarters had one door and one window, and each quarter was provided with a kitchen, a verandah, a privy and some open space, the dimension of each room being about 12 feet by 10 feet. Birlapur is situated in rural surroundings, and it is a good thing that the employers built these habitable dwellings for a good proportion of their industrial workers. We also inspected the old cooly lines known as "Magazine lines" appertaining to the Birla Jute Mill. The Magazine lines were at a little distance from the main mill and these were not found to be so satisfactory as the main cooly lines. The Magazine lines are situated on low-lying grounds, and the amenities are not so good. Still it was pleasing to notice that even the Magazine lines were not back-to-back huts and the rooms were provided with windows and there were privies and kitchens, and little courtyards attached to the rooms. We are satisfied that the problem of housing for the jute mill labour is extremely urgent. The question however is what this Tribunal can do with regard to this matter.

16(2). In this connection the most important question is who will be made to shoulder the responsibility of effecting improvement in the housing conditions, or whether the responsibility, financial or otherwise, can be legitimately cast on the employers alone. In investigating this aspect of the question we are naturally inclined to consider to some extent what different Commissions and Committees appointed for the purpose in the past have observed, and what the Government itself has so far said or done. At pages 285-86 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Labour in India, we find the following observations:—"One fact which stands out from the outline we have given is that the action taken by the parties concerned, employers, Government and local bodies, is in the inverse ratio to their responsibility. Employers have done most; municipal councils least. The latter are primarily responsible for the health of their citizens and that responsibility cannot be discharged in the industrial cities unless a vigorous attempt is made to improve housing............ Whilst the primary responsibility as we have shown, rests with the municipal authorities, they are entitled to look for expert advice and stimulus from Government." The Health Development and Survey Committee (1943) has opined that housing of the low income groups should be treated as a public service and that the Government should accept the responsibility for it. The Government of India Labour Investigation Committee in its Report (1946) at page 343 observes as follows:—"The main desideratum is the enactment of an Industrial Housing Act by the Government of India providing for the creation of an All-India Industrial Housing Board and Provincial or Regional Boards............ The proposed Housing Boards should be of a tripartite character, due representation being given to employers, employees and Government. They should be left to decide in each individual case whether the financing of housing should be a duty of employers or Government or both............ The State should accept a direct responsibility for the housing of workers and provide capital finance for the same. We are of opinion that the capital outlay on workers' houses should be raised by Government and advanced to the All-India Housing Board. This Board will co-ordinate the activities of Provincial or Regional Boards and advance funds to each according to its needs. The recurrent expenditure—interest, depreciation, maintenance, repairs, etc., may be distributed between employers and workers, the latter paying it in the form of monthly rent which should in no case exceed a certain percentage of earnings (say, 10 per cent.)............ We feel that regional dispersal of industries and industrial housing is a great necessity. The Housing Boards should attend to the dispersal of industries in rural and semi-urban areas to avoid the dreadful squalor and congestion in industrial towns in this country."

16(3). The problem of industrial housing and the employers' responsibility in this connection were discussed in the 7th meeting of the Standing Labour Committee held in August 1945 and an Industrial Housing Sub-Committee of a tripartite character was appointed to consider the question of industrial housing and its finance. The appalling conditions of housing in respect of industrial workers generally were well-known and the Housing Sub-Committee was asked to consider—

(a) whether there should be a building fund,

(b) the basis on which the workers would be required to pay rent,

(c) the minimum standards required for workers' houses,

(d) the most suitable manner of administering funds,

(e) the facilities that are required to be granted by the Central and Provincial Governments and local bodies to facilitate the housing schemes for workers.

The Industrial Housing Sub-Committee of the Standing Labour Committee in its report, dated the 25th May 1946, has made certain detailed recommendations about the standards of accommodation, ventilation, lighting, sanitation, drainage, etc. A broad feature of these recommendations is that a house to accommodate an industrial worker and his family should comprise at least two rooms, a kitchen with storage space for food and fuel, an independent bathroom, a lavatory, verandahs preferably both in front and at the back and a courtyard, with adequate supply of water and where possible with water-borne sanitation, and the total floor area of the two main rooms exclusive of verandahs should be not less than 240 square feet. The Housing Sub-Committee has gone into reports of different Commissions and Enquiry Committees and has come to its own conclusions. In paragraph 35 of the Report the Sub-Committee observes as follows:—"The task of housing industrial workers in urban areas, because of its magnitude, can only be successfully undertaken by the collective efforts of the local authorities, Government and the employers. The Committee are unanimous in their opinion that it will not be possible to provide the minimum standards required for workers' houses on an economic basis for the lower paid industrial workers unless such housing schemes are subsidised by the Central and Provincial Governments and employers. In urban areas and other areas developed by local authorities, workers' houses should be built and owned by the local authorities." Apart from these observations with regard to the question of responsibility for industrial housing in urban areas the Committee proceeds in paragraph 36 of its Report to discuss the question of responsibility for industrial housing in rural areas and makes the following observations:—"In the case of factories located in rural areas the responsibility for housing must be solely that of the employer. He should be asked to provide living accommodation to the prescribed standard for the labour he employs in his factory within a period of 10 years. The Committee recommend that this should be laid down as a statutory responsibility." It appears however, that two of the members of the Housing Sub-Committee (Mr. Srikantan and Mr. Kagal) differed from the majority view of the Committee fixing responsibility for industrial housing in rural areas on the employer, in so far as the dissentient members apprehended that such recommendation of the Committee would have the effect of throwing a heavier responsibility in respect of liability to house the labour on the rural employer than on the urban employer and in consequence there might be a tendency towards over-concentration of industry in urban areas, which it was desirable to prevent. In paragraph 40 of the Report the Housing Sub-Committee has suggested the imposition of a levy on the employer of Rs. 2 per month per house for every house allotted to him and the provision by Government of long term interest-free loans. The Sub-Committee has appended to the report a summary of the recommendations which are on the following lines:—

"(a) There should be a building fund provided to finance the housing of workers who are unable to pay economic rent for the minimum standard of housing laid down. Central and/or Provincial Governments should make available long term interest-free loans for houses built to approved standards and such loans should be redeemed by the building authority by means of a sinking fund spread over for a period of not less than 30 years. No question arises in the case of those employers who have already provided housing for their labour until accommodation to the extent of 100 per cent. of the demand is provided for industrial workers in any area. Provided that if any special form of direct taxation on industry is introduced by Government, such taxation should include provision for rebates to employers in respect of any existing housing which though not complying with the prescribed standards may be approved by the building authority under such conditions as they may prescribe.

(b) The Committee were unable to arrive at any agreed decision as to the basis on which workers can be required to pay rent.

(c) The minimum standards recommended for workers' houses are set out in the earlier paragraphs of the Report.

(d) The housing fund, and in the first instance the housing subsidy we have recommended, should be administered by a National Industrial Housing Board, including representatives of the Provinces, the Centre, the States, employers, labour and other interested parties.

(e) To enable a start to be made with a nation-wide housing of poorer workers it is recommended that Provincial and Central Governments between them provide the necessary finance by making available long-term interest-free loans for approved schemes complying with the minimum standards recommended. It is recommended that the employers be asked to pay a sum of Rs. 2 per month per house for every house alloted to them. Any deficit that may remain over and above that covered by the employers' contribution and the interest-free loan should be met by a further subsidy raised by some form of general taxation. To ensure that houses are constructed as cheaply and as efficiently as possible it is essential for the Central and Provincial Governments to co-ordinate the building programmes through the National Industrial Housing Board. The Provincial and local authorities should be responsible for making available properly developed sites for approved housing schemes."

16(4). On the 25th and 26th July 1946, the Standing Labour Committee held its 9th meeting and after having considered the recommendations of the Housing Sub-Committee passed a resolution incorporating the following main points:—

"The Standing Labour Committee requests the Government of India to establish immediately a National Working Class Housing Board and also to take steps through the Provincial Governments for the establishment of Provincial Boards for promoting the housing of working classes and the carrying out of the programmes as speedily as possible. The Committee further requests the Government of India to supply the National and Provincial Housing Boards the fund necessary to enable them to carry out their functions. The Committee is glad to note that the Government of India have agreed to contribute 12½ per cent. of the cost of building houses but not exceeding Rs. 200 per house. The Committee however is of the opinion that this subsidy offered by the Government of India is wholly inadequate particularly because of the abnormal increase in the cost of material and labour. The Committee therefore recommends to the Government in view of the fact that the contributions to be made by the workers towards the scheme by way of rent should not, on the whole, exceed more than 10 per cent. of the earnings of the working classes, the deficit amounts should be made good by contributions from the Central Government, the Provincial Governments, the Local Bodies, and the employers, and the Central Government should take immediate steps to determine the respective responsibilities of these various parties."

16(5). The five-year labour programme of the Government of India in respect of legislative and administrative measures to be undertaken by the Central Government for the amelioration of labour conditions in the country was formulated in 1946 to remove the chief defects revealed by the Royal Commission on Labour (1929-31) and the Labour Investigation Committee (1946). The question of housing was included as one of the administrative measures contemplated in this programme. In course of presenting the resolution on the Government of India's Industrial Policy to the Dominion Parliament on the 6th April, 1948 (the resolution being approved on the 7th April, 1948), the Hon'ble Dr. S. P. Mukherjee, Industries and Supply Minister, stated as follows:—"The Government of India are taking special steps to improve industrial housing as quickly as possible. A scheme for the construction of one million workers' houses in 10 years is under contemplation and a Housing Board is being constituted for this purpose. The cost will be shared in suitable proportions between Government, employers and labour, the share of labour being recovered in the form of a reasonable rent."

16(6). From what has been discussed above in a more or less chronological manner it appears that the improvement of housing conditions in respect of the jute mill labour is a matter of joint responsibility of the State and the employers, and that the State has already started taking action in this matter. There is of course no manner of doubt that in so far as the question of housing is connected with the conditions of labour of the workers concerned, the issue under consideration constitutes an industrial dispute, and this Tribunal has complete jurisdiction to deal with the matter. As we feel satisfied that the responsibility with regard to this subject cannot and should not be laid entirely on the employers, and it is after all a question of apportionment of responsibility, we feel definitely confronted with the question as to the manner in which the responsibility should be apportioned among the different parties concerned. In the first place, the State which is vitally concerned in this matter is not represented before us. Even if we had thought fit to ask the State to be represented in these proceedings, we doubt whether the State would be in a position to formulate its final proposals as quickly as we would desire in the interest of the Tribunal's coming to an early decision. Evidently the Government is going to take a little time in order to finalise the most important question of apportioning the responsibility, financial and otherwise. Although we have jurisdiction to deal with the issue, we do not consider it proper to give any direction in a hap-hazard manner at this stage as we are of opinion that any such direction with regard to the employers alone would be harmful and not beneficial to the interests of the workers themselves. No sufficient data have been placed before us to enable us to determine the character and degree of responsibility which should be laid on the employers. Under these circumstances we have come to the conclusion that the subject of housing for the industrial labour connected with the Jute Textile Industry should wait for the present and we must refrain from giving any directions.

16(7). This however does not mean that we are precluded from making any requests or recommendations. We have seen that the conditions of housing, particularly in respect of the jute mill labour with which we are concerned, are positively deplorable, and most of the houses either within the mill compounds or in the outside bustees where the majority of the jute mill labour manage to live, are unfit for human habitation. The subject therefore calls for an immediate remedy. We therefore earnestly request the Government to take up the question of industrial housing, particularly in respect of the jute mill labour in West Bengal, as early as possible, and come to a speedy conclusion about the character and degree of responsibility which can legitimately be laid on the employers. As regards the employers in the jute mills, concerned in these proceedings, we would like to make an appeal in the hope that they should not slacken their efforts in any way in the direction of improving the housing conditions to the best of their ability. We realise that some of the employers have done something in the past though all have not done enough to the extent desired. We recommend that the employers in the jute mills should push forward their building programmes in spite of the position that the final shape of their responsibility with regard to this subject cannot yet be determined. We particularly recommend that the back-to-back huts, which are ill-ventilated and ill-lighted and are admittedly unfit for human habitation, should be got rid of and should be replaced by better houses as quickly as practicable. In doing so we believe the employers will advance their own interests, in so far as the workers will get the chance of living in better and healthier conditions and will consequently be fitter to do the work with efficiency and to the satisfaction of the employers. As the Royal Commission on Labour in India observed on page 286 of the Report—"The employers must have realised the economic advantages obtained from more contented labour forces through an increased efficiency and consequently a greater capacity for output." In this connection we think that a special responsibility lies on the employers who have established mills in rural areas, in so far as houses in such areas outside the mill are very rare. We however refrain, at this stage, from making any comparative analysis of the responsibilities of the employers employing jute mill labour in rural areas and in urban areas. We would only like to close this subject by drawing the attention of the employers to the fact that in making its recommendations the Industrial Housing Sub-Committee of the Standing Labour Committee has indicated the idea that if any special form of direct taxation is introduced by Government such taxation should include provision for rebates for employers in respect of any existing housing. We have no doubt that those employers who have been considerate enough to construct houses for some portions of the labour force will not be placed at any disadvantage, when the State finalises the housing scheme, and we trust that the activities of considerate employers in this direction will be properly appreciated when the final scheme is drawn up.

16(8). The next question under this issue is a claim for house allowance to the extent of Rs. 10 per month for each worker, till a complete and satisfactory housing scheme is carried into effect. The idea put forward by the Unions is that where proper houses have not been constructed by the employers on lands provided by the mills concerned, an adequate house allowance should be given to the workers to enable them to find satisfactory houses outside the mills. It seems to us extremely doubtful whether satisfactory houses will be found even outside. Housing is a serious problem for the entire population under the conditions prevailing in the country as a whole. We have seen what kind of houses can be had in the outside bustees. A mere grant of a house allowance is not likely to help the workers to any appreciable extent in solving the house problem. Apart from this aspect of the matter, the question is whether an additional charge in respect of house allowance should be laid on the employers separately or whether the scales of wages should include the element of cost on account of housing accommodation. We may state here that in fixing the standard of minimum earnings for the lowest paid workmen (both manual and clerical) we have taken into consideration the element of cost on account of housing accommodation. In dealing with the issues on minimum wages and other scales of wages and dearness allowance, we have directed a substantial advance on the existing scales, and as we have said the extra cost on account of housing accommodation has already been taken into account in determining the new scales. The subject of housing in all its aspects, including the question of rent payable by the workmen, should, in our view, await the formulation of the final scheme by the State in collaboration with the employers and all others concerned and we do not think it desirable to introduce any new element of a separate house allowance at this stage. In that view of the matter, we decline to give any direction in our award on the subject of granting a house allowance for the workers at present.

ISSUE No. 16.—Revision of medical facilities.

17. We now pass on to consider Issue No. 16 relating to a scheme for revision of the existing medical facilities. The general complaint made by the Unions on behalf of the workers is that the existing medical facilities available to the workers are generally very poor, and in many cases they are not available in actual practice owing to the prevailing corruption among the members of the medical staff. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union, for instance, has complained that while the mill dispensaries are poorly equipped, and no relief in cases of serious and acute maladies is in practice intended to be given, the facilities said to be given are in practice denied to many owing to a demand of illegal charges. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation, the Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union and the Bengal National Chamber of Labour have joined their voices in demanding that (1) some big indoor hospitals should be established in selected jute mill areas to serve the needs of the jute mill workers, (2) several medium size indoor hospitals with adequate equipments and staff should be established in the jute mill areas for the same purpose, and (3) a well-equipped dispensary with a whole-time qualified medical staff should be established in every jute mill. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has also demanded that a centre for investigation and treatment of diseases peculiar to the Jute Textile Industry should be established, and this demand will be dealt with under Issue No. 17(b). The Indian Jute Mills Association in its written statement contends that this matter of medical facilities is not a proper subject for the Tribunal's decision as the Government is already contemplating inplementation of the recommendations of the Health Survey and Development Committee (1943) with a view to improve the medical facilities in the country, and the final decisions rest with the Government. The gist of the Association's contention is that the Tribunal cannot usefully intervene in the matter, in so far as the Government, which is primarily responsible for expanding the medical facilities in the country as a whole including the industrial areas, has taken up the matter for consideration. In its written statement the Association favours the establishment of a well-equipped dispensary in each mill to conform to certain standard medical requirements, in a vastly improved medical scheme for the entire population.

17(1). We may now proceed to draw a picture of the existing medical facilities with reference to the observations made by recent Committees and to our own experience in course of the inspections we have made. We may usefully quote some of the remarks made by Sri S. R. Deshpande on page 32 of his Report on an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India, which run as follows:—

"Most of the jute mills have dispensaries attached to them. The standard of medical relief offered to the workers varies greatly as between mill and mill. In the majority of the mills the dispensaries provided are not in a very satisfactory condition. The trouble seems to be that several of these are in charge of ill-paid doctors earning about Rs. 100 per month. Nor are the dispensaries well laid-out so as to ensure privacy during medical examination. Many workers seem to have no confidence either in the medical officer or in the medicines given at these dispensaries, and that is one of the reasons why they resort to all types of quacks."

It will also be pertinent to quote some passages from pages 357-358 of the Main Report of the Government of India Labour Investigation Committee (1946), which run as follows:—

"Generally speaking the medical organisation of the country as a whole is extremely inadequate, and correspondingly the special medical facilities provided by employers are also insufficient from both the quantitative and qualitative standards. * * * * It may be useful to give a rough picture of the type of medical facilities actually provided by employers. These are, of course, of various types and grades ranging from mere first-aid to hospitals of first class type. Thus, many employers have dispensaries, but there are not enough drugs and appliances nor a qualified full-time medical man to administer them. Some factories employ a part-time doctor who visits the factory premises once or twice a fortnight or more often, just for an hour or so, and the workers are required to consult him while he is available. * * * * The position in regard to the provision of maternity and child welfare centres is much less satisfactory than that of ordinary medical facilities."

We should like now to supplement the above by the results of our own inspections. We have found that the standards of medical facilities vary very widely from mill to mill, and it is clear that these are growing up in the light of local conditions according to the capacity and willingness of the respective employers to afford them. The medical arrangements in the Angus Jute Mill at Bhadreswar in Hooghly district are strikingly elaborate. There are a fair size male hospital and a female hospital besides a well-equipped dispensary, with fairly extensive laboratories and X-ray installations, under the supervision of 5 qualified doctors including a very experienced and highly qualified western medical man. We saw new quarters for a lady doctor and some nurses being built. We are told that this extensive medical institutions serves the workers of a few other mills under the same managing agents and also treats some outsiders. In the Birla Jute Manufacturing Company's mill at Birlapur, in the rural areas of 24-Parganas district, we found a fair size outdoor dispensary with a small indoor hospital under the charge of two doctors assisted by 4 compounder-dressers and one midwife. The arrangements here are fairly good, though of course they cannot bear comparison with what we saw in the Angus Jute Mill. In a small mill like Prabartak Jute Mill at Belghurriah in 24-Parganas district the medical arrangement was naturally very small, there being some sort of a dispensary with a part-time doctor on Rs. 40 per month and a whole-time unpassed compounder-dresser on Rs. 45 per month, the average daily attendance being 10 or 12. We have seen dispensaries of an intermediate character, and we cannot say that they are all of the desirable standard. We agree with the views expressed by Sri S. R. Deshpande and by the Labour Investigation Committee generally that the majority of the mill dispensaries are ill-equipped and are not run with efficiency, and they do not adequately serve the needs of the working population appertaining to the different jute mills. We are, therefore, satisfied that the demand for improving the medical facilities in the jute mills as put forward by the Unions on behalf of the workers, is a very genuine demand, and there is no manner of doubt that at the present moment the medical needs of the workers are very meagrely satisfied and in spite of the existence of the external paraphernalia in some places real service is in many cases not available at all.

17(2). It is therefore clear that there is considerable room for improvement in respect of the medical facilities available to the jute mill workers. The question, however, is who will shoulder the responsibility, financial and otherwise, of introducing adequate improvements, and to what extent this Tribunal can throw the burden on the employers. With regard to this aspect of the matter the Government of India Labour Investigation Committee has made the following observations on pages 357-358 of the Main Report (1946):—

> "With regard to the provision of medical facilities, the most important question of principle involved is the extent to which employers can be made responsible for financing medical facilities. It is no doubt true that employers have a duty towards their workers in mitigating their physical suffering in so far as this is directly due to industrial employment. On the other hand, society as a whole must share the responsibility for industrial employment with all its attendant evils and to that extent must be regarded as liable to bear a part of the cost of medical facilities specially meant for hazardous or physically uncomfortable employment. * * * * It may as well be recognised that the specially hazardous nature of industrial employment requires that the State should give somewhat preferential treatment to industrial and urban areas where health conditions are less satisfactory than in rural areas owing to congestion and insanitary environments. At the same time, as admitted earlier, it is the responsibility of the employer partly, and perhaps even of the worker, to help in the provision of medical facilities. Accordingly, we are inclined to the view that provision of medical facilities though primarily the responsibility of the State should also be supported by employers and workers themselves. The Unified Scheme of Social Insurance, providing for factory workers medical care in respect of the three contingencies of sickness, employment injury and child-birth, which is envisaged by the Labour Department of the Government of India is a step in the right direction."

These observations, with which we agree generally indicate that the entire responsibility in respect of improving the medical facilities cannot be thrown on the employers alone, and the State has a substantial part to play with regard to this matter. The State has already recognised that position and is taking necessary steps to perform its part in collaboration with all others concerned. The Royal Commission on Labour (1929-31) made certain detailed recommendations, one of them (No. 204 in Appendix I, on page 512 of the Report of the Royal Commission. Also see page 448 of the Main Report of the Labour Investigation Committee) being that surveys should be made by Government medical departments of the medical facilities required in urban and industrial areas, and these surveys should be considered at joint conferences of the parties interested. Another recommendation (No. 212 in Appendix I, on page 513 of the Report of the Royal Commission. Also see page 449 of the Main Report) was that all methods should be explored that might lead to the alleviation of existing hardships arising from the need of provision for sickness. In 1946 the Labour Investigation Committee observed, on page 448 of the Main Report, as follows:—

"No such surveys have so far been undertaken by most of the Provincial Governments. It is, however, hoped that as a result of the survey made by the Health Survey and Development Committee appointed by the Government of India and the Health Insurance Scheme which is at present under consideration of the Government of India, adequate medical facilities will be available to urban and industrial areas in due course."

In this connection it may be observed that the Health Survey and Development Committee was appointed by the Government of India in October 1943 to make (a) a broad survey of the position in regard to health conditions and health organisations in India, and (b) recommendations for future developments. In March 1943 again Professor B. P. Adarkar was appointed an officer on special duty in the Labour Department of the Government of India to prepare a scheme of Sickness Insurance for industrial workers. A panel of advisers representing the employers and the workers and a panel of actuaries were also appointed to assist and advise him. He prepared a comprehensive report on health insurance for industrial workers in August 1944. This Report was considered at the 6th Labour Conference held in October 1944 and also at the meeting of the Standing Labour Committee held in March 1945. The Labour Department had also the expert assistance of Messrs. Maurice Stack and Raghu Nath Rao who were deputed by the International Labour Office at the invitation of the Government of India. In the light of the discussions with them and also with the Health Survey and Development Committee, and the Education, Health and Lands Department, a revised integrated scheme of health insurance, workmen's compensation and maternity benefit was prepared by the Labour Department with particular reference to workers employed in perennial factories. The opinions of the Provincial Governments were taken on the scheme and a Bill called the Workmen's State Insurance Bill was introduced in the Indian Legislature in November 1946. After consideration by a Select Committee which made important amendments, the Bill was eventually passed into law on the 2nd April 1948 as the Employees' State Insurance Act, 1948. It will be clear, therefore, that this important piece of legislation came into being during the pendency of the present proceedings before this Tribunal. We feel that it is very necessary for us to examine this new legislation and analyse all its implications, in so far as they appear to have considerable bearing on the issue relating to medical facilities which we are now considering. We may state here in passing that the parties appearing before us had no occasion to refer to this new Act, inasmuch as it did not become the law of the land at the time when arguments with regard to the issue before us were being advanced, but we consider it our incumbent duty to take serious notice of this new law.

17(3). The Employees' State Insurance Act provides for the creation of a fund consisting of contributions received from the employers and employees, donations and gifts from the Central Government or Provincial Governments, Indian States, local authorities, etc., and the fund is to be administered by a Corporation. The fund is to be expended, amongst others, for (1) payment of benefits and provision for medical treatment to insured persons and their families, if extended, (2) establishment and maintenance of hospitals, dispensaries and other institutions and the provision of medical and other ancillary services to insured persons and, where the medical benefit has been extended, to their families (section 28 of the Act). The Act lays down that subject to the provisions of this Act, all employees in factories or establishments to which the Act applies shall be insured in the manner provided by the Act. Under the Act a person employed on a remuneration which in the aggregate exceeds four hundred rupees per month has been excluded, amongst others, from the category of employees. The Act lays down provisions for payment of contribution by the employers and also by the employees to enable the employees to get the benefits specified in Chapter V. Under the Act the benefits available are of a varied nature, such as, sickness benefit in cash (section 49), disablement benefit (section 51), medical benefit (section 56). Where an insured person dies as a result of an employment injury sustained as an employee under this Act, his dependants will be entitled to get a cash benefit known as dependants' benefit (section 52). An insured woman is entitled under section 50 to a maternity benefit in cash for a period both before and after the confinement. The medical benefit under section 56 is to be given either in the form of out-patient treatment and attendance in a hospital or dispensary, clinic or other institution or by visits to the home of the insured person or treatment as in-patient in a hospital or other institution. It is understood that the Government of West Bengal has already undertaken an industrial survey to give effect to the Employees' State Insurance Act. The jute mill workers being employees in perennial factories will come under the purview of this Act and the insured workers in the jute mills will be entitled to treatment in their residential concentrations either at a dispensary or at their own house. This, we understand, would include treatment, medical, surgical, obstetric, supervision at child-birth, simple ante-natal and post-natal care, some degree of preventive treatment like vaccination and inoculation and free supply of all necessary drugs, dressing and facilities on the prescriptions of the insurance medical officer. The target aimed at is to have a Health Insurance Dispensary to serve an insured population of 4,000 with a staff of 2 medical officers, one nurse-midwife, compounder, dresser, etc. It is understood that it is also proposed to increase the normal hospital facilities to provide accommodation for insured persons in parallel with the hospital facilities for other members of the community, and steps will be taken to augment the existing hospital facilities with a view to meet the needs of the insured persons. We understand that the survey has been undertaken with a view to ascertain the residential concentrations of factory workers and their dependants and also to map out the existing medical facilities which could be utilised or correlated to the proposed scheme of medical aid under the Insurance Act, and the survey is expected to be completed in the near future and the scheme is expected to be given effect to as early as possible after the collection of the data and preparation of the detailed plan and allotment of necessary funds.

17(4). It is clear from the above that the State is going to take up the matter of improving the medical facilities available to industrial workers generally, and to the jute mill workers in particular so far as we are concerned, and the final scheme under the Employees' State Insurance Act is expected to be in operation in the near future. The working out of the scheme after the collection of the necessary data and of the necessary funds may perhaps take a little time, but we can reasonably anticipate that the new Act will be in operation within a measurable distance of time. This Tribunal is consequently called upon to come to a decision in view of the existing inadequate medical facilities on one side and of the prospective adequate medical facilities which can be expected to be afforded under the provisions of the new Act in the not very distant future. The most important question therefore arises as to whether we, sitting on this Tribunal, should intervene substantially with regard to the matter of medical facilities at this juncture. As we have already observed the responsibility for maintaining medical institutions at an adequate level of efficiency and of improving such facilities as may exist in some mills at the present time can be laid on the employers only in part, and with regard to a matter like this, active collaboration of the State seems to be indispensable. Under these circumstances we do not propose to lay down any hard and fast scheme or standard with regard to medical facilities to be carried out by the employers. We expect that the operation of the Employees' State Insurance Act will serve to remove many of the present defects, and the existing hospitals and dispensaries in many of the jute mills will in all probability be utilised and correlated to the proposed scheme of medical aid under the Insurance Act. We are therefore unable, under the present circumstances, to give any direction on the employers for the establishment of any new hospitals as proposed by the Unions appearing before us. We feel, however, that the existing hospitals should be run efficiently and should be improved wherever practicable, and the existing dispensaries should be maintained with greater efficiency and should be improved as far as practicable till the medical amenities afforded by the new Insurance Act come into full operation and the existing medical facilities become superfluous or are merged in the new scheme under the Act. By improvements we mean that doctors (who must of course be qualified medical practitioners) should be whole-time officers as far as practicable, so that the medical facilities may be available to the workers at all times of emergency, and the equipments should be fairly adequate.

17(5). There is however one aspect of medical facilities which must be compulsorily enforced irrespective of the question of the prospective operation of the Employees' State Insurance Act. On page 358 of the Main Report, the Labour Investigation Committee observes as follows:—

"We feel that there is a residue of medical amenities which can be rightly regarded as the sole responsibility of the employer. In particular, the provision of first-aid in the event of sudden sickness or an accident is undoubtedly the responsibility of the employer. Likewise, provision of ambulance, maintenance of standards of industrial hygiene, etc., may also be regarded as primarily matters to be dealt with by employers. * * * * In most places, there is no one trained in first-aid * * * * The absence of any obligation of the employers to maintain a person trained in first-aid has thus practically nullified this provision of the law." In this connection we shall refer to some of the Bengal Factories Rules, 1940. Rule 41 provides for the maintenance and custody of first-aid appliances in every factory. It also lays down that each first-aid box or cupboard shall be placed under the charge of a responsible person who shall always be readily available during working hours. Rule 42 specifies the contents of a first-aid box or cupboard. Rule 43 lays down that where the Inspector so requires a stretcher for the conveyance of injured persons, shall be provided. We further refer to section 45 of the New Factories Bill, which is now on the legislative anvil. This section runs as follows:—

> "(1) There shall in every factory be provided and maintained so as to be readily accessible during all working hours first-aid boxes or cupboards equipped with the prescribed contents, and the number of such boxes or cupboards to be provided and maintained shall not be less than one for every 150 workers ordinarily employed in the factory.
> (2) Nothing except the prescribed contents shall be kept in the boxes or cupboards referred to in sub-section (1), and all such boxes or cupboards shall be kept in the charge of a responsible person who is trained in first-aid treatment and who shall always be available during the working hours of the factory.
> (3) In every factory wherein more than 1,000 workers are ordinarily employed there shall be provided and maintained an ambulance room or dispensary of the prescribed size containing the prescribed equipment and in the charge of such medical and nursing supervisory staff as may be prescribed."

It goes without saying that the present Factories Act and the Bengal Factories Rules enjoin certain duties of a compulsory nature, so far as the employers are concerned. It appears however, that in many instances these rules have been rendered nugatory, as there is a tendency to observe them in form but not in substance. We are of opinion that the rules regarding first-aid appliances and ambulance must be strictly observed, and although the new Factories Bill is not yet an Act, we are inclined to formulate our directions with regard to first-aid appliances and ambulance on the lines of section 45 of the new Factories Bill rather than on the lines of the existing Bengal Factories Rules which are obviously inadequate to meet the needs of the situation. Our award in this direction will of course be applicable to the jute textile mills concerned in the present reference, irrespective of the limitations of the present Factories Act and the Factories Rules. In other words so far as jute textile mills are concerned we propose to bring our directions in line with the provisions of the prospective law of the land with regard to factories.

17(6). In the result, we make our award with regard to Issue No. 16 on the subject of medical facilities by giving the following directions:—

(1) There shall in every jute mill be provided and maintained so as to be readily accessible during all working hours first-aid boxes or cupboards equipped with the contents prescribed by rule 42 of the Bengal Factories Rules, 1940, and the number of such boxes or cupboards to be provided and maintained shall not be less than one for every 150 workers ordinarily employed in the mill.

(2) Nothing except the prescribed contents shall be kept in the boxes or cupboards referred to in clause (1), and all such boxes and cupboards shall be kept in the charge of a responsible person who is trained in first-aid treatment and who shall always be available during the working hours of the mill.

(3) In every jute mill a stretcher for the conveyance of injured person shall be provided, and in every mill wherein more than 1,000 workers are ordinarily employed there shall be provided and maintained an ambulance room or dispensary, containing adequate equipments, and in charge of suitable medical and nursing supervisory staff.

(4) The existing hospitals and dispensaries should be maintained on lines of efficiency, and should be improved as far as practicable, till the medical amenities afforded by the Employees' State Insurance Act come into full operation and the existing medical facilities become superfluous or are merged in the facilities afforded by the Insurance Act.

(5) In the case of any jute mill where there is no dispensary at present, a dispensary with an adequate quantity of medicines to meet the needs of the workers of the particular mill, and with other equipment of a moderately adequate standard under the supervision of a qualified medical practitioner assisted by other suitable and adequate staff (such medical practitioner being a whole-time officer as far as practicable), should be opened within 3 months from the date of publication of this award.

ISSUE No. 17.—(a) Improvement of Working Conditions and Sanitary Arrangements, (b) Provision against Occupational Diseases and Hazards.

18. We now take up the subject of (a) improvement of working conditions and sanitary arrangements, and (b) provision against occupational diseases and hazards under Issue No. 17. We proceed to deal with item (a) first. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation has asked for improvement of working conditions and sanitary arrangements within the mills and scientific arrangements for outlet of dust and jute fibres in the Batching and Preparing Departments. The claim of the Chamber of Labour is to the effect that the jute mill and the area in which the workmen's quarters are situated should be kept clean and in sanitary condition, and the latrines and urinals within the mill premises should be maintained in accordance with the standard prescribed by the Bengal Factories Rules, and there should be separate latrines and urinals for women workers and women belonging to the families of workers in general. The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union has asked for adequate supply of light and drinking and bathing water. The Indian Jute Mills Association has contended that the questions involved are of a technical nature and they are not fit subjects for the consideration of this Tribunal. The Association has also pointed out that these matters can, at best, be dealt with by legislation, and the Factories Act has laid down provisions for the proper regulation of the matters under consideration, and better arrangements are going to be provided for in the new Factories Bill which is now on the legislative anvil and which presumably will become an Act in the near future. The gist of the Association's contention is that there is really nothing for the Tribunal to do with regard to the subject.

18(1). We may, at this stage, examine the state of things with regard to working conditions and sanitary arrangements which have been noticed by the Royal Commission on Labour and the Labour Investigation Committee. The Royal Commission (1929-31) felt the necessity of expert medical inspection of factories to ensure that sanitary arrangements were placed on a proper footing. We may usefully quote some of the observations made by the Commission on page 70 of its Report, which run as follows: "Many of the questions which arise in connection with factory administration require medical knowledge, and with the growing complexity of Indian Industry the need for this knowledge increases. * * * * * We recommend that in every Province there should be one officer with medical qualifications appointed as an Inspector of Factories, who should be primarily responsible for inspection from the medical stand-point. * * *. There are two Medical Officers already employed as Certifying Surgeons in the Hooghly area and the duties of Certifying Surgeons might be combined with those of medical inspection." To indicate the nature of the working conditions which prevailed in recent times in the jute mills, we may quote the following relevant passages from pages 12-14 of Sree S. R. Deshpande's Report on an enquiry into conditions of labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India: "Most of the jute mills are well laid out and planned. Some of them, however, are not so well lighted as they should be and artificial lighting has to be resorted to even during day-time. Most of the mills are fairly well ventilated, but exhaust fans and dust extractors have not been installed in them. There is enough moving space in the departments of mills for the workers, although in some cases there is room for improvement in the lay-out of the machinery. * * * * * It appears that there has been a striking increase in the number of accidents in practically all the departments in 1944 as compared to 1939. As in previous years, the greatest number of accidents have occurred while working on looms in the Weaving Department. The Spinning Department has, however, shown a decrease in incidence which is probably due to the stepping down in speed brought about to meet the shortage of labour. While interpreting the increase in the number of accidents we must, however, not lose sight of the increase in the total number of operatives coupled with an increase in working hours. * * * * Drinking water is supplied to the workers in the mills through water taps connected with municipal mains; but as the supply is inadequate, many of the mills have augmented the water-supply by sinking tube-wells, which are either electrically or mechanically operated. Water from the tube-wells is plentiful. * * * * * Although the number of latrines and urinals provided is in accordance with the provisions of the Factories Act they are generally very badly kept. They are constructed in close proximity to the departments and the sanitary conditions in these are deplorable. * * * * * It is unusual in this country for factory managements to provide seating arrangements to the operatives during working hours. However, especially in a department in which a large number of women are employed it would help considerably to reduce fatigue if they could get chance of sitting during brief intervals. This is a reform which seems worth a trial."

The Government of India Labour Investigation Committee, in its Main Report, on pages 41-42, observes as follows: "During our ad hoc surveys we found that so far as the larger industrial establishments were concerned, the Factories Act was, on the whole, being satisfactorily observed, although there was a considerable evasion of its provisions in small and seasonal factories, particularly in respect of hours of work and overtime, employment of children, safety, health and sanitation. * * * * * So far as provisions in respect of health and sanitation are concerned, latrines and urinals are generally provided in accordance with the prescribed standards but they are kept in a very insanitary condition. * * * * * The evasions of the law are largely due to the fact that factory inspectorates in different provinces are entirely inadequate." As members of this Tribunal we have had occasion to inspect some of the jute mills concerned in this reference, and we agree generally with the observations which we have quoted above. Facilities for washing and supply of water generally are not quite adequate at some places. We have found the condition of the latrines and urinals to be deplorable at most places. There is a tendency at some places to observe rules under the Factories Act more or less in form, and to ignore the substance. Such a state of things which we have observed should not be allowed to continue, and we feel the necessity of enforcing the requirements of the Factories Act and the Rules with a greater amount of strictness. This can probably be done by arranging more frequent inspections.

18(2). We may then notice to some extent the progress of factory legislation. The Royal Commission on Labour in its Report published in 1931 made several important recommendations for the improvement of the Factories Act. The Factories Act, 1934, is a measure amending and consolidating all the previous factory legislations of 1881, 1891, 1911, 1922 as amended by Acts of 1923, 1926 and 1931. Two of the main objects of the Act were the improvement of the working conditions within the factory and provisions for adequate inspection and strict observance of the Act. The provisions regarding health and safety were amplified and made more stringent. Every factory had to ensure cleanliness, proper ventilation, regulation of over-crowding of space and adequate lighting arrangements within the factory and each factory was required to have adequate supply of pure drinking water, proper sanitary arrangements, sufficient supply of water for washing purposes and to fence dangerous machines. These provisions have been incorporated in Chapter III on the subject of health and safety in the Factories Act, 1934. The Chapter has also made provisions authorising the Provincial Governments to frame rules. Chapters II and III of the Bengal Factories Rules, 1940, dealing with cleanliness and sanitation and ventilation and lighting, have laid down rules regarding the subjects of lime-washing and painting, cleanliness of floors and factory precincts, latrines, septic tank latrines, and urinals, over-crowding, ventilation and windows. In the five-year labour programme of the Government of India it was decided to undertake a thorough revision of the Factories Act, 1934, incorporating provisions, amongst others, regarding health of the workers such as those relating to cleanliness, ventilation, dangerous dust and fumes, lighting, etc., and also laying down standards for welfare measures, such as washing facilities, etc. The new Factories Bill, 1947, which is now on the legislative anvil has been prepared to revise the Factories Act on the lines approved by the Standing Labour Committee and in the light of discussions held with Chief Inspectors of Factories. Chapter III on the subject of health and safety in the present Factories Act has been split up, in the new Factories Bill, into three separate chapters, namely, Chapter III on health, Chapter IV on safety and Chapter V on welfare. In dealing with item (a) of the issue under consideration we are concerned with Chapter III on health and with some portions of Chapter V on welfare. We are of opinion that most of the demands put forward by the Unions on behalf of the workers with regard to working conditions and sanitary arrangements will be adequately met by the provisions indicated in the new Factories Bill. It may be hoped that this Bill is going to be enacted into law in the very near future, and as we consider that if the provisions laid down by the prospective Act will be adequate to meet the needs of the situation as found by us, there is really nothing much for us to do except to give directions in respect of certain matters, in a general way, in accordance with the measures indicated in the new Factories Bill. We feel that even if the present Factories Act and the existing Factories Rules are fully observed by the managements of the different mills in a spirit of strict and faithful compliance, a substantial forward step will be taken. We would like the managements to take note of the prospective provisions incorporated in the new Factories Bill and push their efforts in the directions indicated. We do not propose to give any directions in respect of new subjects which are of a somewhat technical nature, for instance, subjects which may require the installation of new mechanical appliances or may necessitate alterations in the general lay-out of the machinery. For example we have seen that in every jute mill, by reason of the manufacturing process carried on particularly in the Batching and Preparing Departments, a good deal of dust and jute fibre is thrown off, and the existence of such dust and fibre in the air is, in our opinion, likely to be injurious or offensive to the workers employed therein and there should be some method of eliminating the dust and floating fibre. Even though we hold this view, we would prefer, in view of section 15 on the subject of dust and fume in the new Factories Bill, to wait till the new legislation actually comes into operation, in so far as the installation of exhaust appliances involves a matter of technical nature and we do not desire to give any directions which might come into conflict with the directions given by the prospective law and the rules to be made thereunder. We have, therefore, decided to leave a subject like this in the hope that the new law will serve to introduce a complete remedy. Similarly, with regard to the subject of facilities for sitting, while we are of opinion that such facilities should be given, particularly in the case of women workers, we have decided to stay our hands for the present in view of section 44 of the new Factories Bill, which proposes to deal fully with the subject. The subject of facilities for sitting may have certain aspects of a technical nature involving changes in the lay-out of the different parts of the machinery, and we have thought it a better course to wait till the new law and the rules made thereunder come into actual operation.

18(3). We now proceed to give our directions with regard to working conditions and sanitary arrangements, in a general way on the lines of the new Factories Bill. We are purposely not giving any specifications on any subject, and we make it clear that the managements should comply with our directions in accordance with the existing Factories Act and the Bengal Factories Rules, 1940. We would consider such compliance to be enough for our purposes. If and when the new Factories Act and the new Factories Rules come into operation in course of the period during which our award will remain in force the managements will of course comply with our directions in accordance with the provisions of the new Act and the new Rules. We do not anticipate that the transition will be difficult, or that there will be any practical difficulty in complying with our directions which, as we have said, will be more or less of a general nature. We accordingly direct as follows:—

(1) Every jute mill shall be kept clean and free from effluvia arising from any drain privy or other nuisance.

(2) Effective arrangements shall be made in every jute mill for the disposal of wastes and effluents due to the manufacturing process carried on therein.

(3) Effective and suitable provision shall be made in every jute mill for securing and maintaining in every work room adequate ventilation by the circulation of fresh air.

(4) No room in any jute mill shall be overcrowded to an extent injurious to the health of the workers employed therein.

(5) In every part of a jute mill in which workers are working or passing there shall be provided and maintained sufficient and suitable natural or artificial lighting.

(6) In every jute mill effective arrangements shall be made to provide and maintain at suitable points conveniently situated for all workers employed therein a sufficient supply of wholesome drinking water.

(7) In every jute mill, sufficient latrine and urinal accommodation of suitable types shall be provided, separate accommodation shall be provided for male and female workers, all such accommodation shall be maintained in a clean and sanitary condition at all times and sweepers shall be employed whose primary duty it is to keep clean latrines, urinals and washing places.

(8) In every jute mill adequate and suitable facilities for washing shall be provided and maintained for the use of the workers therein. Separate and adequately screened facilities shall be provided for the use of male and female workers, and such facilities shall be conveniently accessible and shall be kept clean.

18(4). We shall now proceed to deal with item (b) of the issue under consideration. One part of this item relates to the subject of hazards. The representatives of the Unions before us did not raise any specific points with regard to the question of hazards. Some of the representatives alleged that the belting was sometimes unsatisfactory and good belting should be provided. In view of the position that the question of hazards generally was not discussed, we do not propose to give any particular direction with regard to the alleged bad belting and we consider that the law and rules with regard to safety measures as involved in the present Factories Act and the existing Bengal Factories Rules are adequate to meet the needs of the situation. We, therefore, leave the subject of hazards without giving any particular direction in the hope that the managements will strictly comply with the directions given by the law and the rules.

18(5). We shall now pass on to deal with the claim for provision against occupational diseases as put forward by the Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union in particular. This Union has asked for establishment of a centre for investigation and treatment of occupational diseases peculiar to the Jute Textile Industry and also for provision for suitable compensation in such cases. We may state at the outset that the question of compensation, which would presumably arise under the Workmen's Compensation Act, is not relevant at the present stage when we do not know whether there is any occupational diseases peculiar to the Jute Textile Industry such as would be recognised under the law. There is a list of industrial occupational diseases in Schedule III of the Workmen's Compensation Act, but none of these diseases appears to be associated with the Jute Textile Industry. The Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has contended that there are good reasons for apprehending that there are occupational diseases peculiar to the working conditions in a jute mill, but these diseases are still undetected as there has been no investigation in the appropriate direction. Our attention has been drawn to certain observations made by the Royal Commission on Labour (1929-31) on page 56 of the Report, which run as follows: "In a number of factories the manufacturing processes disseminate large amounts of dust, arrangements for the elimination of which are frequently defective. Mechanical systems which result in a constant flow of fresh air would add greatly to the comfort of the operative, and would in some cases improve his output. More important is the conservation of the worker's health, for the prevalence of dust may result in pulmonary disease. In certain manufacturing processes, particularly connected with cotton, jute and wool, the reduction of dust to a minimum should be made obligatory."

The following observations of the Royal Commission on page 252 of the Report may also be usefully referred to—"Although the majority of witnesses assured us that industrial disease was seldom brought to their notice, we are satisfied that further investigation is necessary. We anticipate that here, as in other countries, when skilled observers are set to work, the usual diseases associated with industry will be found to exist, their non-detection possibly being due to the fact that they are either never seen by a medical man or, if seen, pass unrecognised and undetected."

We may also refer to the observations made by the Government of India Labour Investigation Committee on page 377 of the Main Report (1946), which run as follows: "As regards occupational diseases, although some of these have been included under Schedule III to the Workmen's Compensation Act, it is virtually inoperative and the position pointed out by the Royal Commission that only in cases of lead poisoning are workers compensated for still holds good. This is largely because the diseases enumerated in the Schedule are difficult of early detection by ordinary medical men, and unfortunately we have few experts in India who have any specialised knowledge of industrial diseases. This means that even if the Schedule is extended the workers will not get much relief. The proper course is to establish an adequate machinery for research and early diagnosis and treatment of occupational diseases. * * * * * At the same time, we have no doubt that in mines and factories, the incidence of occupational diseases must be not inconsiderable. In view of all these facts, we are inclined to the view that the whole problem of provision for employment injury and occupational diseases should be taken out of the hands of the employers and entrusted to an organisation set up for State insurance."

18(6). Sri Indrajit Gupta for the Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has urged the establishment of an Institute of Research on the subject of occupational diseases peculiar to the Jute Textile Industry. Sri S. K. Basu, for the Jute Mill Workers' Federation, has suggested that necessary research in India should be entrusted to the Indian Research Fund Association or to the All-India Institute of Hygiene or the Tropical School of Medicine, Calcutta. Sri S. Choudhury on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association has contended that there are no reasonable grounds for suspecting that there are any occupational diseases peculiar to the industry and the Tribunal should not give any direction with regard to this matter. We understand that there is a certifying surgeon in West Bengal who is a Senior Medical Officer of the rank of a Civil Surgeon and who in his capacity as Inspector of Factories looks into the medical requirements of the Factories Act. It is further understood that the West Bengal Government has a scheme for appointing a Lady Inspector of Factories in accordance with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Labour. The Royal Commission also recommended that in the more industrialised Provinces the Public Health Department should be strengthened to deal with industrial hygiene and industrial diseases and at least one of the Assistant Directors of Public Health should have special knowledge of these subjects. We understand that there is in West Bengal a Senior Medical Officer in charge of Industrial Hygiene and supervision and control of tuberculosis, and this officer is designated as Special Officer, Tuberculosis Control and Industrial Hygiene. As mentioned in Item No. 199 on page 511, Appendix I, Report of Royal Commission on Labour, and on page 446 of the Main Report of the Labour Investigation Committee, the Royal Commission also recommended that industrial health research should be entrusted to the Indian Research Fund Association. The Scientific Advisory Board considered this recommendation of the Royal Commission in December 1931, and opined that there should be a bureau under the Central Government to deal with industrial health and that the Industrial Research Fund Association would gladly co-operate with such a bureau in carrying out the research which might be necessary, provided additional funds were placed at its disposal to do so. This opinion was endorsed by the Governing Body of the Indian Research Fund Association in March 1932, but it has not so far been possible to implement the recommendation of the Royal Commission. An Industrial Health Advisory Committee has been set up in 1945. This step may be expected to lead to research into special problems affecting industrial health. The Indian Research Fund Association has, however, carried out independent enquiries in respect of some diseases in the industrial field including the general problem of tuberculosis which was specially investigated by Dr. Ukil from 1927 to 1943. At the All-India Institute of Hygiene and Public Health, Calcutta, the subject of physiological hygiene was included in 1939 in the curriculum of students studying for the diploma of Public Health. The department concerned is called the section of Bio-chemistry, Nutrition and Physiological Hygiene, and in order that it may have facilities to investigate problems of industrial health among Indian workers, the Government of India permitted Dr. M. N. Rao, a Demonstrator in the Section, to accept a Study Fellowship from the Rockefeller Foundation. Dr. Rao appears to have completed his course in the United States and to have returned to the Institute where he has been appointed as an Assistant Professor of Industrial and Physiological Hygiene. He has started working on the problems in which he received special training and arrangements are being considered for training of persons for work in the industrial health field. It, therefore, appears that research on industrial health and incidentally of occupational diseases as already been taken up to some extent and it is likely to gain momentum. We have no doubt that the question of the existence of any occupational disease amongst workers in the Jute extile Industry, who are in the neighbourhood of 3 lakhs in all, is bound to attract the attention of the Governments of India and of West Bengal, and of research scholars in the All-India Institute of Hygiene and Public Health, Calcutta, and in other institutions. We invite the attention of the Governments concerned for considering the advisability of setting up a regular machinery for conducting researches of a sustained character into the question of industrial health and occupational diseases in connection with the Jute Textile Industry in particular. We feel that we are unable to give any specific direction with regard to this subject but we recommend that this matter be taken up in right earnest by the authorities concerned.

ISSUE No. 18.—Cheap Canteen.

19. We may now pass on to consider the demand for cheap canteens under Issue No. 18. So far as the written statements are concerned the claim for the establishment of cheap canteens in all the jute mills has been put forward by the Bengal Jute Mill Workers' Federation and the Bansberia Jute Mill Employees' Union. In course of the hearing all the Unions supported the claim. The demand is that there should be an adequate canteen in every jute mill, and at such canteen food should be available at the market price or at cost price, and it should not be run on any profit-making basis. It has been contended on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association that canteens are not very popular and it is not the intention either of the present Factories Act or of the new Factories Bill to introduce a canteen in every factory, and the Tribunal should not give any general direction for the establishment of canteens.

19(1). On pages 66-67 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Labour in India (1931), the Commission has, among other things, observed as follows: "Some employers provide lunch sheds and the practice might be adopted more generally. * * * * The provision of some shelter where rest and refreshment can be taken is in many cases necessary and, moreover, would be generally appreciated by the workers. Similarly the provision of canteens might be considered in the case of the larger factories. * * * * * We recommend that the possibility in this direction be examined with a view to a wider adoption of amenities of this kind."

On page 32 of his Report on an Enquiry into the conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India Sri S. R. Deshpande makes the following observations: "Only a few mills have started canteens where light refreshments and tea are served. It is understood that in the initial stages considerable difficulties were experienced in running the canteens owing to factors relating to caste, different dietary habits of the workers, etc. One mill has now introduced the system of serving cooked meal in its canteen. Some mills run their own tea canteens, while others have licensed vendors under the supervision of the management. In some cases the mills allow outsiders to sell tea and light refreshments in the precincts of the mills. One mill supplies tea to its workers at 50 per cent. of the market price."

On pages 352-355 of the Main Report (1946), the Labour Investigation Committee observes as follows: "The works canteen is being increasingly recognised all over the world as an essential part of an industrial establishment, providing undeniable benefits from the point of view of health, efficiency and well-being. To introduce an element of nutritional balance into the otherwise deficient and unbalanced dietary of the workers, to provide cheap and clean food and an opportunity to relax in comfort near the place of work, to save time and trouble to workers on account of exhausting journeys to and from work after long hours in the factory, and to enable them to surmount the difficulties experienced in obtaining meals or foodstuffs—these are some of the objects of an industrial canteen. * * * * In a majority of mills and factories in India there are no canteens at all. * * * * * In most places, where canteens exist, they are little more than private contractors' tea-stalls, supplying tea and sweets. Where foodstuffs are supplied, they are neither cheap nor good in quality, while the environments are anything but clean, sanitary or attractive. * 'The maximum of profit' is the only principle of the contractor, who is there by virtue of being the highest bidder for the contract. * * * * * The usual objections raised by employers against starting canteens are that the dietetic habits of the workers vary widely, that workers of different communities are not prepared to mess together, that there is no 'canteen habit', that workers generally prefer to get their meals from home as foodstuffs are not available, etc. But every one of these objections has been proved to be untenable wherever a canteen has been run on sound lines after proper planning."

19(2). We agree generally with the views expressed above, and we are of opinion that canteens are a necessity for ensuring the health and welfare of the workers, and for increasing their efficiency and consequently the output of production. In 1946 the Labour Investigation Committee found that there was no law regulating the establishment of canteens. Since then by the Amending Act V of 1947 section 33A relating to canteens was introduced in the Factories Act. This new section lays down that the Provincial Government may make rules requiring that in any specified factory wherein more than 250 persons are ordinarily employed an adequate canteen should be provided for the use of the workers. Practically the whole of the existing section 33A of the Factories Act is sought to be enacted as section 46 in the new Factories Bill. It does not indeed appear that even in the new Factories Bill the establishment of a canteen is made compulsory. We are not aware that the Provincial Government of West Bengal has made, under the powers given by section 33A of the present Factories Act, any rules for the provision and maintenance of adequate canteens in the jute mills. We are of opinion, however, in the light of the observations made by the Royal Commission and the Labour Investigation Committee, and of what we have personally seen in different jute mills, that a canteen, at least of a moderate type, is an absolute necessity. It is true that the present Factories Act or the prospective law in respect of factories does not make any provision of a compulsory nature regarding canteens. It is, however, open to the Provincial Government to make it compulsory in effect by making rules in respect of the jute mills in West Bengal. The claim for cheap canteens raises a dispute which is connected with the conditions of labour and it is undoubtedly an industrial dispute, and this Tribunal has ample jurisdiction to deal with the subject in the interest of the industry and its workers as a whole. We have seen canteens in some places, whereas in other places there is probably no canteen of any type. We are of opinion that in every jute mill in West Bengal there should be a canteen where at least tea and snacks and light refreshments, if not cooked food, should be available. We are satisfied that canteens will be quite popular if they are run on proper lines.

19(3). At present, in a mill where there is a canteen, the management pays for the room, fuel, light, utensils and implements, and charges are made for the cost of food materials and attendants. The present position is that cooked food canteens exist in only about 6 jute mills and tea tiffins are available in about 45 to 50 of the mills. It is, therefore, clear that without any direction of an obligatory nature many of the employers have been reasonable enough to encourage the establishment of canteens and we are of opinion that the establishment of canteens will not really throw any substantial burdens on the employers at all. In our view, canteens, at least of a moderate type providing tea and light refreshments, can and should be established in all the jute mills involved in this reference all of which appear to employ more than 250 workers ordinarily, and while the employer should bear the expenses on account of the room or rooms, fuel, light, utensils and implements, the workers should pay for the food supplied at cost price which would include the cost of food materials and of attendants. We are not disposed to give any specifications of the size and standard of canteen rooms or of the kinds of food to be supplied as we feel that this matter may be conveniently left to the good judgment of the employers themselves who may ascertain the views and inclinations of the workers. As regards the specifications regarding the standards of accommodation and other details as mentioned in clause (2) of section 33A of the present Factories Act, which are the same as those to be found in clause (2) of section 46 of the new Factories Bill, we expect that the employers will take the necessary directions from the Provincial Government which has the power to make rules on the subject. So far as our award is concerned we give the following directions:—

(1) An adequate canteen, wherever it exists in a jute mill, should be maintained, and should be improved as far as practicable, for the provision of tea and light refreshments, and also of cooked food if possible and if required by a substantial body of workers.

(2) Where no canteen exists at present in a jute mill ordinarily employing more than 250 workers, a canteen of a moderate type supplying food on the lines indicated in clause (1) above should be opened within two months from the date of publication of this award.

(3) With regard to the running of a canteen the employer concerned shall provide the room or rooms and shall pay for the fuel, light, and the supply of necessary utensils and implements. The food supplied to the workers shall be available at cost price which will include the cost of food materials supplied and of attendants.

ISSUE No. 19.—Provision for Rest and Recreation.

20. We now take up the question of providing for rest shelters and recreation centres under Issue No. 19. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation has demanded provision for recreation, amusement and libraries for the workers. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour has demanded that every jute mill should have an adequate shelter for the use of the workmen during the recess period, in accordance with the standards specified in rule

45 of the Bengal Factories Rules, 1940, and that these shelters may also be used as common rooms, reading room, libraries, and meeting places of the workmen during non-working hours and holidays. The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union has also asked for provision for amusements, recreation and libraries. During the hearing the learned Advocate for the Jute Mill Workers' Federation pressed that every individual jute mill should provide for a welfare centre to accommodate at least 15 per cent. of the total labour force in each, and each centre should provide for various amenities including indoor and outdoor games, libraries, radio sets, occasional cinema shows, etc. It was also proposed on behalf of the Jute Mill Workers' Federation that there might be a combination of more than one mill for the purpose of starting a welfare centre. This suggestion regarding the combination of more than one mill has, however, been opposed by the Bengal National Chamber of Labour and Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union. The Indian Jute Mills' Association has stated that this is not really a subject of dispute between the mills and their labour, as all the mills are in agreement with the principle that some suitable form of rest and recreation centre should be provided so far as the circumstances may permit. In course of the argument the learned Counsel for the Association has stated that about 50 per cent. of the mills already have rest shelters within the factory premises for the labour to rest during recess periods. He gave the assurance that the mills were prepared to provide for common room facilities near the residence of the workers and that these common rooms might be maintained by more than one mill. It was pointed out that it might not always be practicable to have suitable places outside the mill compounds for the building of common rooms or recreation centres for the labour force.

20(1). We may now proceed to consider the present state of things as regards the subject of rest and recreation as appilcable to the jute mills in West Bengal. In this connection we may usefully quote the following passages from pages 372-73 from the Main Report of the Government of India Labour Investigation Committee (1946): "We may now turn to some of the other basic needs of the worker which appear to us fundamental and which affect his health and efficiency. These include reasonable facilities for rest and recreation, welfare measures and the provision of congenial conditions of work and safety measures. * * *. In the jute mills in Bengal, the interval granted between two spells of work is sometimes as long as 4 to 5 hours, but such interval hardly serves the purpose of rest, because where no housing is provided nearby, the workers have to go a few miles to their homes to cook their food and to rush back to work. * * *. In most establishments there is no provision for rest shelters with the result that the workers have to eat their meals either in the departments themselves or in the open and get no rest at all. We need hardly take notice of the contention of many managements that Indian workers prefer to rest under the shade of trees rather than in shelters built for the purpose. Barring a few exceptions the shelters we have inspected have been no better than cattle sheds." As regards our personal experience as Judges of the Tribunal, we have seen fairly good shelters in one or two places, whereas those in others are in unsatisfactory condition. It is understood that there are rest shelters in about 50 per cent. of the jute mills at the present time. As regards the issue under consideration we should consider it under two heads, namely, (1) provision for rest shelters and (2) provision for recreation centres or welfare centres. In dealing with the question of rest shelters we may refer to rule 45 of the Bengal Factories Rules, 1940, which lays down that "in any factory in which more than 150 workers are ordinarily employed, the Provincial Government may require that an adequate shelter or shelters shall, before a specified date.

be provided for the use of the workers during their periods of rest." Under the present rule, the provision for an adequate rest shelter is not compulsory. Under section 47 of the new Factories Bill it is laid down that "in every factory wherein more than 150 workers are ordinarily employed, adequate and suitable shelters, or rest rooms shall be provided and maintained for the use of the workers, provided that any canteen maintained in accordance with the provisions of section 46 shall be regarded as part of the accommodation required by this section." Under the prospective new law, therefore, the provision for shelters or rest rooms has been made compulsory. We have felt in the light of what we have seen and heard that the provision for shelters or rest rooms should be made compulsory on the lines of section 47 of the new Factories Bill, and in our view a rest shelter should be provided in every jute mill, the position being that every jute mill which we are dealing with employs more than 150 workers.

20(2). We then pass on to consider the question of recreation centres or welfare centres. We found a good recreation centre at the Angus Jute Mills at Bhadreswar in Hooghly district. But the vast majority of the jute mills are conspicuous by the absence of any recreation centre. At the present time there are 10 welfare centres run by individual jute mills for their own labour population, these mills being Angus Jute Mills, Champdani Jute Mills, Presidency Jute Mills (near Konnagar), National Jute Mills (Rajgunj), Delta Jute Mills (Manikpur), Hukum Chand Jute Mills (Naihati), Agarpara Jute Mills, Gouripur Jute Mills (Naihati), Baranagore Jute Mills and Hooghly Jute Mills. It is understood that a welfare centre is under construction at Fort Gloster Jute Mills at Bauria. Apart from these centres run by individual mills, there are 6 welfare centres provided by the Indian Jute Mills' Association, these being located at Hajinagar, Kankinara and Titaghur on the eastern bank of the river Hooghly and at Sibpur, Serampore and Bhadreswar on the western bank and the Association appears to have spent over these centres more than Rs.54,000 in 1947. It further appears that the actual attendance of the workers in these welfare centres is not more than 4 per cent. of the total labour force. The present scheme of the Indian Jute Mills' Association is to use the Association's centres for the purpose of co-ordinating the centres located in individual mills. It further appears that the Government of West Bengal maintains at the present time 10 welfare centres in the jute industrial areas, two being located at Howrah and Bauria, two at Belliaghata and Matiabruz, four at Budge Budge, Sodepore, Gouripore and Kankinara, and another two at Rishra and Telinipara. It is understood that the Government has spent about Rs. 20,000 during the year 1947-48 over these welfare centres. It is presumed that these Government welfare centres can also serve as co-ordinating factors. There is indeed no statutory provision for the establishment of recreation centres or welfare centres, but the Government, the Indian Jute Mills' Association, and several progressive individual jute mills have taken up the matter in the practical field of affairs obviously for the simple reason that such centres are a necessity for the well-being of the working population. We are of opinion that there should be a welfare centre of moderate size and equipments attached to every jute mill with which we are concerned, and the centres under the management of the Government of West Bengal and of the Indian Jute Mills' Association may very well serve the purpose of very useful co-ordinating factors. We do not propose to give any specifications about the size or the nature and quality of the equipments to be provided in such welfare centres, but we shall expect that welfare centres for individual mills wherever they exist will be improved, and they will be opened with at least moderate equipments for indoor games and other amusements, in mills where they do not exist at present.

20(3). In the result, we give the following directions in our award:—

(1) Every jute mill shall provide for and maintain an adequate and suitable shelter or shelters for the use of the workers. Any canteen, which may be maintained, or may be opened and maintained in accordance with our direction in connection with Issue No. 18, shall be regarded as part of the accommodation provided for the shelter or shelters, and should be as near the latter as possible. Specifications regarding the shelter or shelters should be in accordance with the directions of the Provincial Government under rule 45 of the present Bengal Factories Rules, 1940, or under any law or rules which may come into force on the enactment of the new Factories Bill.

(2) A recreation centre or welfare centre shall be opened in every jute mill, where there is none at present, and there shall be provision of indoor games and other amenities at such centre. We do not propose to give any specifications regarding the size and equipments of these welfare centres, in the hope that this will be determined by the employers themselves. It is hoped that these new welfare centres will work in co-ordination with the centres being maintained by the Government and by the Indian Jute Mills' Association. In order to minimise the cost of construction the question of having the recreation or welfare centres in the rest shelters which we have already directed to be established may be considered, wherever possible, provided that such shelters can be made accessible to the workers during non-working hours without detriment to the safety of the factory. In cases where the suggested combination of a shelter room and a recreation centre is not practicable or desirable, recreation centres should be separately maintained.

(3) Rest shelters and recreation or welfare centres where they do not exist at present should be opened within four months from the date of publication of this award.

ISSUE No. 20.—Provision for Creches.

21. The next subject for our consideration relates to the demand for providing for creches in jute mills employing a substantial number of female workers. This demand has been put forward on behalf of the workers by the National Chamber of Labour and the Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union. In course of the hearing the other Unions supported the demand. It has been contended that creches are a necessity in factories employing women workers, and among other things creches have an educative influence on mothers who are workers. It has also been argued that creches are likely to attract more women workers and wives of male workers to come and work. The presence of the latter, it is contended, is likely to create a healthy domestic life leading to the ultimate well-being of workers both male and female. On behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association, Dr. Waight has admitted the desirability of establishing creches in factories employing female labour, and it has been submitted that the employers agree that the condition of existing creches should be improved. It has, however, been contended that the Tribunal should not go beyond the limits of the legislation in this connection.

21(1). At this stage we may discuss the general condition with reference to creches in the mills. On pages 65-66 of its Report (1931) the Royal Commission on Labour in India observes as follows: "Creches are not uncommon in factories employing women, and some we saw were admirably staffed and equipped; others, if better than nothing, still left much to be desired; yet others were both dirty and inadequately furnished. In many of the factories employing women in substantial numbers, no creches have been provided, and this is particularly true of the Bengal jute mills, where caste feeling and the reluctance of women to leave their young children were stated by some witnesses to create serious difficulties. As a result of their absence, infants are taken into the mills and can be found lying on sacking, in bobbin boxes and other unsuitable places, exposed to noise and danger of moving machinery and a dust-laden atmosphere and no year passes without a certain number of serious and minor accidents, and sometimes even of deaths, occurring among such children. It is important that creches, when first opened, should be well-furnished and properly supervised. If suitable women are placed in charge, and short periods of absence from work at necessary intervals are granted to the nursing mothers, we believe that gradually the initial prejudices and diffidence of the women could be overcome. .... We recommend that creches should be provided in all places where women are employed, in considerable numbers, and we would make the obligation a statutory one in all factories employing not less than 250 women." The Health Survey and Development Committee, on pages 84-85 of Volume I of its Report (1946) observes as follows: "The employment of women workers makes it essential that there should be provision for nurseries or creches where their children can be left and given proper food and attention while the mothers are away at work .... The absence of a statutory obligation, however, makes employers indifferent about providing creches .... In Bengal the provision of creches is not a statutory obligation. Some of the large concerns, including the jute mills, have, however, voluntarily established them and have also included the supply of milk and supervision for the children." Sri S. R. Deshpande in his Report (on page 32) on an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in the Jute Mill Industry in India observes as follows: "About 20 mills have provided creches. Here again, the standards of maintenance, equipment, cleanliness, etc., vary considerably. Some of them are well-equipped with cradles, while the equipments in others leave much to be desired. There appears to be a great need for starting creches in other mills, as women are employed to a considerable extent. Cases have been reported of mothers doping their babies with opium to keep them quiet during the time that they are at work." The Government of India Labour Investigation Committee, on page 355 of the Main Report, observes as follows: "On the whole, the employers have been rather slow in observing the requirements in regard to provision of creches even in Provinces where the law requires it. Things were bad enough in former years when there was no provision of creches, as women used to keep their children with them while working near the machines or, worse still, drug them with opium and leave them at home. Mills which are not legally obliged to establish creches do not have them at all .... Even where the rules are observed, the tendency is to conform only to the letter of the law and to break the spirit of it. Thus some dark room in a corner away from the work place may be set apart with no playthings to attract the children and nobody to look after them. .... Generally speaking, the creche is one of the neglected corners of the factory and if an ayah or nurse is in attendance, she seldom pays sufficient attention to the requirements of the children left there. The emoluments of nurses in charge are usually low. Supervision even in good creches leaves much to be desired." As noticed on page 8 of Deshpande's Report, women are generally employed in the batching department as teasers and in the preparing department as feeders and receivers on the breaker and finishing cards and on drawing machines and as roving feeders. They form a high percentage of hand-sewers in the finishing department. In course of our inspections of jute mills we have found that there is a substantial number of women workers, particularly in the departments just mentioned in good size mills. It is understood that at the present moment there are creches in a little over 30 jute mills in West Bengal. We are surprised to find no creche in a large well-equipped mill like the Angus Jute Mill at Bhadreswar, where the medical facilities in other directions are of a strikingly elaborate character. The small number of creches that we have seen in course of our inspection are not in satisfactory condition and we agree generally with the spirit of the observations which we have quoted above from different reports that there is a great deal of room for effecting improvement in the condition and general supervision of creches. We are of opinion that creches are a great necessity in factories where there is a substantial number of women workers.

21(2). We may now discuss the state of the law and rules in connection with the provision and maintenance of creches. Section 33, clause (2) of the present Factories Act, lays down that the Provincial Government may make rules requiring that in any specified factory, wherein more than fifty women workers are ordinarily employed, a suitable room shall be reserved for the use of children under the age of six years belonging to such women, and prescribing the standards for such rooms and the nature of the supervision to be exercised over the children therein. Rule 46 of the Bengal Factories Rules, 1940, lays down as follows: "In any factory in which more than fifty women workers are ordinarily employed, the Provincial Government may require that a room or rooms shall, before a specified date, be provided and reserved for the use of children under the age of six years belonging to such women, and such rooms shall conform to the following standards:—(1) They shall be of adequate size to comfortably accommodate the number of such children brought into the factory premises; (2) they shall be adequately lighted and ventilated and give effective protection from the weather, and where necessary, provided with punkhas or fans; and (3) lavatory accommodation, washing facilities and a sufficient supply of potable water shall be provided and an experienced woman supervisor shall be placed in charge of such rooms, and suitable arrangements shall be made for the care of and attention to the children who use them." It will be noticed that the present state of the law does not make it obligatory on the management of a factory to provide for and maintain a creche, unless the Provincial Government has actually passed an order in respect of the particular factory. The progress of legislation appears to be making further advance in the proper direction, in so far as section 48 of the new Factories Bill seeks to place an obligation in this direction on every factory employing more than 50 women workers. Section 48 of the new Factories Bill runs as follows:—"(1) In every factory wherein more than 50 women workers are ordinarily employed, there shall be provided and maintained a suitable room or rooms for the use of children under the age of six years belong to such women. (2) Such rooms shall provide adequate accommodation, shall be adequately lighted and ventilated, shall be maintained in a clean and sanitary condition, and shall be under the charge of women trained in the care of children and infants. (3) The Provincial Government may make rules, (a) prescribing the location and the standards in respect of construction, accommodation and furniture and other equipment of room to be provided under this section; (b) requiring the provision in factories to which this section applies of additional facilities for the care of children belonging to women workers, including suitable provision of facilities for washing and changing their clothing; (c) requiring the provision in any factory of free milk for such children; (d) requiring that facilities shall be given in any factory for the mothers of such children to feed them at the necessary intervals." It will be clear that the prospective legislation, when enacted more or less in the form presented in the new Factories Bill, will serve to make a distinct advance on the present state of things. While we are of opinion that creches should be established in all jute mills ordinarily employing more than 50 women workers, we do not wish to give any specifications regarding the construction of rooms and equipments in general, and we feel that we must leave these matters to the Provincial Government to regulate, in accordance with the prsent law and rules, or in accordance with the prospective law and rules when the latter actually come into operation. All we can do at the present stage is to give a general direction.

21(3). Accordingly, we direct as follows:—In every jute mill wherein more than fifty women workers are ordinarily employed there shall be provided and maintained a suitable room or room for the use of children under the age of six years belonging to such women. Such rooms shall provide adequate accommodation, shall be adequately lighted and ventilated, shall be maintained in a clean and sanitary condition and shall be under the charge of women experienced in the care of children and infants. As regards specifications regarding the location and the standards in respect of construction, equipments and other particulars, directions should be obtained from the Provincial Government under the present law and rules or under any prospective law and rules which may come into operation. Existing creches should be improved as far as practicable in respect of equipments and supervision. Where a creche does not exist in a jute mill required to provide for and maintain a creche according to this award, a creche should be opened within 3 months from the date of publication of this award, and then maintained on proper lines.

ISSUE No. 21.—Arrangement for Educational Facilities for Adult Workers and their Children.

22. The next subject for our consideration relates to arrangements for educational facilities for adult workers and their children under Issue No. 21. The Unions appearing before us prayed for facilities for free and compulsory education of the workmen and their children in schools maintained by the respective jute mills. The Bengal National Chamber of Labour has demanded that the mills should make arrangements for free and compulsory education of the workmen below 40 years of age and that primary schools for the education of boys and girls of the workmen should be set up in all the mills. The Chamber has also suggested the establishment of Middle Schools by a process of combination of mills, and has further asked for the establishment of a technical school under the auspices of the Indian Jute Mills' Association where the sons and dependants of the workmen should receive technical training. The Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union has put forward a claim for free primary educational institutions and night schools. The Bansberia Jute Mill Employees' Association has asked for a school for boys and another for girls at least up to the Middle standard. The Jute Mill Workers' Federation has demanded free education for adult workers and their children and establishment of libraries. During the hearing Sri S. K. Basu, Advocate for the Federation, has put forward demands in respect of an upper primary school for the workmen's children, and a night school for the workmen in each jute mill, 4 free secondary schools at suitable centres in the jute mill areas and 3 or 4 technological institutes for the training of selected operatives. In its written statement, the Indian Jute Mills' Association has stated that the subject matter of this issue is no matter of dispute between the parties, and the Tribunal should not examine the subject. The Association further observes as follows:—"In its financial aspects the industry with others will be called upon to share; in its responsibility it is entirely a matter for the State. Whatever the mills have done in this way has been again purely voluntary and to try to fill the gap caused by the State's own deficiencies." The Prabartak Jute Mill states in its written statement that while the authorities are alive to a sense of their duty for providing necessary educational facilities for the children of the workmen, they have been unable to go far enough owing to financial difficulties.

22(1). Before we proceed further to deal with this subject of educational facilities for workmen and their children, we feel called upon to decide the point as to whether the claim involved in this issue is an industrial dispute which this Tribunal would have jurisdiction to deal with. It has been contended on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association, during the hearing, that this matter does not constitute an industrial dispute and consequently the Tribunal has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon it. We do not think that it is necessary to go into this contention very elaborately. We do not see any difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the dispute over the subject matter of the present issue must be held to be connected with the conditions of labour within the meaning of section 2(k) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, even if it may be somewhat difficult to say that this matter is connected with the terms of employment. We have no doubt that the dispute over the subject matter of this issue is an industrial dispute and this Tribunal has ample jurisdiction to deal with it. The question is not really of our jurisdiction, and the main point seems to be how far the Tribunal would be justified in imposing burdens on the employers, and to what extent and on what lines burdens in respect of provision for educational facilities for workmen and their children can be properly laid on the shoulders of the employers.

22(2). We may now proceed to give a picture of the needs in the direction of educational facilities. Let us start with certain observations made by the Royal Commission on Labour in India (1931). On pages 27-31 of its Report, the Commission observes as follows:—"In India nearly the whole mass of industrial labour is illiterate, a state of affairs which is unknown in any other country of industrial importance. It is almost impossible to overestimate the consequences of this disability, which are obvious in wages, in health, in productivity, in organisation and in several other directions. Modern machine industry depends in a peculiar degree on education, and the attempt to built it up with an illiterate body of workers must be difficult and perilous. We would emphasise the fact that, precisely because of this, the education of industrial labour should receive special attention. Many employers have endeavoured to do something towards making good the deficiency by means of factory schools and a few of the schools we saw are admirable examples of their kind, and represent a big outlay in cost and thought.................. But employers in many cases would be making a valuable contribution if they were prepared to develop the education of their workers' children in their factory schools. The non-working child is likely to get much more advantage from such education than the half-timer. The difficulty here is the economic pressure which tends to drive the child to work at an early age. But we believe that employers who, as some have already done, make the small outlay necessary to keep such children at school will be doing a real social service; moreover, they will probably reap the benefit later by introducing a better type of worker, thus paving the way for selected men to rise higher. At the same time, the main responsibility for education in industrial areas cannot be thrown upon the employers. In this, as in other matters, some employers have done admirable work in the attempt to remedy the deficiencies of the responsible authorities, and we believe that few would be unwilling to cooperate if definite and reasonable schemes were put before them. For example, the Indian Jute Mills' Association, while emphasising the view that it was not the employers' duty to educate labour, expressed its readiness to co-operate with Government in the matter, if invited to do so. Without doubt the task is primarily one for the community acting through local bodies and Government and we would repeat, in the interests of Indian industry and labour, that the industrial areas have a special claim to attention.................. There is a strong case for the preferential treatment of those areas in view of the economic results to be obtained. It is for the education authorities to take the lead, but the end in view justifies them in calling on the employers' associations and individual employers to assist .... One advantage which education will bring to the industrial worker will be the opening of avenues of promotion at present closed to him .... We recommend that the Indian Jute Mills' Association should combine to maintain a part-time school for selected adults and adolescent operatives. Such a school would, we hope, secure a good Government grant, as it would have a strong claim to State assistance." On page 33 of his Report of an Enquiry into Conditions of Labour in Jute Mill Industry in India Sri S. R. Deshpande observes as follows:—"Some mills have established schools for children of their operatives but many others only made contributions to local schools in the neighbourhood. The management of the Birla Jute Mills, however, have set up two night schools for the education of the adult workers and books, stationery, etc., are supplied free. There are also two primary schools and a high school for the education of the children of their operatives. One of the mills provides free primary school to Muslim boys only. No classes have been organised for education of adult workers except at 3 or 4 welfare centres of the Association where attempts are being made in this respect. Speaking generally, the facilities provided for the education of the children of the operatives are very poor." We of this Tribunal have had the opportunity of examining the standard of the educational facilities provided in some mills which we have had occasion to inspect, and we agree generally with Sri Deshpande's observations that on the whole the facilities provided for education in the jute mills are very poor, and there is undoubtedly a great deal of room for improvement. On behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association it has been represented to us that at present there are primary schools in 29 out of the 89 jute mills with which we are concerned, and primary education is also given in the six welfare centres conducted by the Association. We have further been given to understand that the Association has provided for a number of scholarships to facilitate the technical education of their operatives, and the establishment of a technological institute is under contemplation.

22(3). The real point, as we have already indicated, is whether the responsibility for provision of educational facilities for the workmen or for their children can be thrown entirely on the employers, and if the entire responsibility cannot be thrown on them, to what extent and in what manner the employers should be called upon to share the responsibility. From portions of the observations made by the Royal Commission on Labour which we have quoted above, it will appear that the Commission was of opinion that the main responsibility for education in industrial areas could not be thrown upon the employers, and the task was primarily one for the Government and the local bodies, and it was for the education authorities to take the lead and to call upon the employers to assist and participate in the responsibility. With regard to this aspect of the matter it may be useful to quote certain observations made by the Government of India Labour Investigation Committee on page 362 of the Main Report which run as follows:—"We are not sure, however, that provision for educational facilities could be imposed upon employers as a matter of policy. As in the case of medical facilities, if any employers actually do provide such facilities, they must be considered as merely gratis. From this point of view it is interesting to note that the educational scheme of the Central Advisory Board of Education (popularly known as the Sargent Scheme) envisages the financing of a system of national education by the Central and Provincial Governments, partly supported by religious trusts and partly by one or two other sources." This view of the Labour Investigation Committee with regard to the question of responsiblity for providing educational facilities supports the opinion of the Royal Commission on Labour on the same subject, and after giving careful consideration to all aspects of the matter, we have come to the conclusion that the responsibility, financial and otherwise, cannot be thrown entirely on the employers, and the State has necessarily a large part to play in initiating appropriate schemes, which may be worked out, in respect of industrial workers and their children, with the financial and other assistance of the employers. The position is that it is for the State to take the initiative. We understand that the Government of West Bengal have already in hand schemes which will cover the education of adults and children in the jute mill areas. It is understood that the scheme of adult education will comprise literacy and vocational training, and that of children's education will comprise a pre-basic standard (age group 3 to 5 years), and a basic standard (age group 6 to 11 years). We further understand that employers of large scale labour will be required to run the adult education classes at the places of work under the direction and advice of officers and committees to be set up by Government and to bear a part of the expenditure on this account, as may be decided in due course, and that the whole scheme may be in operation in the near future.

22(4). The question pre-eminently arises as to what the Tribunal should do by way of giving an award on the subject of provision for educational facilities for adult workmen and their children. We are glad to find that the Provincial Government has already taken up the matter in hand in pursuance of a general scheme of advancement of education for the entire community, and the Government is alive to the needs of the industrial workers and their children in the sphere of education. Under the circumstances, we feel that it will not be proper for us to introduce any scheme of educational institutions independently of the general scheme which is likely to be worked out in practice by the Government in collaboration with the employers. In our view any imposition of a scheme evolved by us may perhaps be harmful to the cause of education in so far as the details of any such scheme may not be consistent with those of the general scheme which Government is likely to introduce within a short time. We have therefore come to the conclusion that it is not expedient, under the prevailing circumstances, to give any direction on the employers of the jute mills with which we are concerned for starting any new educational institutions of a specific character or standard. At the same time we are of opinion that the existing institutions for providing education either to workers or to their children should be continued at a proper level of efficiency, and employers should be encouraged to improve the educational facilities as far as practicable. As regards primary education for adult workers and their children the employers may be encouraged to start new institutions in mills where they do not exist at present, but we are not disposed to specify any standards or curricula for such new institutions, and we would desire that such new institutions should be started and run in co-ordination with the education authorities under the Government of West Bengal. As regards secondary schools we find from a list of high schools and colleges published by the Department of Education, Government of Bengal, corrected up to the 31st December, 1944, that there are at present in existence about 20 aided high schools and an equal number of unaided high schools in the jute mill areas which cover a distance of about 60 miles on either side of the river Hooghly. The establishment of about four more high schools at selected centres in the jute mill areas, at the cost of the employers in the jute textile industry, as suggested on behalf of the Unions, would not add materially to the existing educational facilities, and we consider it expedient that the question of further advancement in the direction of establishing more secondary schools in the part of the country covered by the jute mill areas should be left to the Provincial Government in the Department of Education to decide, as, in our view, the establishment of new educational institutions of this character must necessarily be a part of the entire educational structure, with which we are not acquainted. As regards the provision for technical education also we are unable to give any definite directions under the present circumstances. We shall however give some directions of an appropriate character and make some recommendations for the consideration of the parties concerned, and we shall expect the Government of West Bengal to bring adequate schemes of education for the adult workmen and for their children in the jute mill areas to be put into operation as quickly as possible.

22(5). In the result, we direct that the existing primary or secondary schools for children or schools for adults in the jute mills concerned should be maintained at an adequate level of efficiency and should be improved as far as practicable. We recommend that primary schools for workers' children, and night schools or other schools for adult workmen be started in those jute mills where they do not exist, in consultation with the Department of Education, Government of West Bengal, and in co-ordination with such schemes as may be contemplated by Government. It is hoped that the educational activities of the welfare centres under the management of the Indian Jute Mills' Association and of Government, respectively, will be maintained at a high level of efficiency and will be further improved as far as practicable. It is further hoped that the system of scholarship for the encouragement of technical education as introduced by the Indian Jute Mills' Association will be maintained and the Association will do everything in its power to start the proposed technological institute at a very early date.

ISSUE No. 22.—(a) Free Supply of Implements to Mechanical Workers and Carpenters and (b) Free Supply of Uniforms to Durwans and Drivers, and Members of Crews on Launches.

23. We next proceed to take up Issue No. 22 which is divided into two parts. Taking up the first part relating to the demand for free supply of implements to mechanical workers and carpenters, we observe that this demand was put forward by the Jute Mill Workers' Federation and the Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union. The Indian Jute Mills' Association in its written statement has stated that it agrees that where it is necessary for the performance of a man's work that he should have tools, the obligation rests with the employer to provide these to the extent and of the nature which the work (not the worker) demands. The Association further states that the demand is no one of general application to the industry, as it is not within the knowledge of the Association that a different practice is being observed in any concern. In course of the hearing it is generally agreed that implements to be used by mechanical workers and carpenters for the purposes of performance of the work given to them should be supplied free by the employers concerned. We, therefore, direct that free supply of implements as demanded by the Unions be made in all the jute mills involved in this reference.

23 (1). We then pass on to consider the second part of Issue No. 22 relating to the demand for free supply of uniforms to durwans and drivers and members of crews on launches. This matter also is very simple in so far as the learned Counsel for the Indian Jute Mills' Association has intimated to the Tribunal that the mills concerned agree to supply both summer and winter uniforms and waterproofs to durwans and drivers and shirts and shorts to members of crews on launches. The representatives of the Unions appearing before us accept the proposal as satisfactory. We are of opinion that the proposal should be given effect to in all the jute mills involved in this reference and we direct accordingly.

ISSUE No. 23.—Revision of the System of Recording Attendance.

24. We now pass on to consider Issue No. 23 relating to the demand for revision of the present system of recording attendance. At present the system appears to be that the attendance of workers is recorded by the members of the clerical staff. The present system is objected to on the ground that members of the clerical staff who are in charge of the time arrival sheets of the workers often indulge in certain abuses, and this system is not free from corruption. The demand for a revision of the present system has been put forward by the Jute Mill Workers' Federation and the Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union. It has been suggested that in place of the present system the punching (clock) system, which is a mechanical system, should be introduced. It is expected by the Unions that mechanical system will not be liable to abuses. We have seen a specimen of a punching (clock) machine, and we have examined its operation. The operation is no doubt automatic, but the ticket concerned has got to be introduced by human agency. It appears that a large number of punching (clock) machines will be required in order to avoid overcrowding of workers at the same time, and chances of recording attendance by proxy even by means of the mechanical system cannot altogether be ruled out. Janab Shafaatullah Khan, on behalf of the Bengal National Chamber of Labour, has expressed doubts about the incorruptibility of even the mechanical clock machine which also will have to be operated by human hands. The Indian Jute Mills' Association, in its written statement, does not controvert the proposition that the present system should be changed for promoting an incorruptible atmosphere as regards the matter of recording attendance of workers, and the Association agrees in principle that some sort of mechanical device should be adopted for the purpose. It is represented to us, however, that at the present moment punching clock machines are not easily available, and the best course for us would be to say that while the present system which is not free from corruption should be changed, some kind of mechanical system which may be easily introduced should be adopted. We agree that the present system of recording attendance should be discontinued as soon as possible and we direct accordingly. We further direct that some kind of mechanical system which may be easily available under present circumstances should be introduced at the earliest opportunity in all the mills involved in this reference.

ISSUE No. 24.—Representatives of the Employees to be taken in the Administration.

25. The next issue which we proceed to deal with is Issue No. 24 relating to a demand put forward by the Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union alone to the effect that representatives of the employees should be taken in the administration of the concern. The extremely concise manner in which Sree Shib Nath Banerji, on behalf of this Union, expressed his demand was probably misleading, and the Indian Jute Mills' Association in its written statement with regard to this demand has stated as follows:—"This item is no matter of dispute; for there is no bar to the appointment by mills of any workers to the administrative staff." What was really meant in the demand, however, was not a question of appointment of any suitable and capable worker to the administrative staff, but a question of participation of the workers, through their representatives, in the administration and management of the concern. When the position was made clear in course of the hearing of this matter, the representatives of the Indian Jute Mills' Association were naturally opposed to the demand.

25 (1). In course of the hearing a point was raised to the effect that as this question was raised by only one Union, the other Unions appearing before the Tribunal could not be allowed to have any say in the matter. The Tribunal eventually deided that as a matter of procedure the other Unions who did not specifically put forward the particular demand would be permitted to participate in the discussion, but whether the eventual award given by the Tribunal would be binding on the other Unions or on workmen represented by the other Unions would be left for decision in the final award. As we left the matter like that at the time of hearing, we are now taking it up for a decision. Sree S. Choudhuri, Counsel for the Indian Jute Mills' Association, definitely put forward the argument that a dispute raised by one Union could not be allowed to be discussed by the other Unions and this contention was overruled by us at the time of hearing. He further contended that the principle of an issue raised by one Union alone would not apply to the other Unions who did not raise the issue or, in other words, that the eventual Award of the Tribunal would not be binding on the other Unions. The proposition put forward by the learned Counsel was controverted by Sree S. K. Basu, Advocate on behalf of the Jute Mill Workers' Federation, and by Janab Shafaatullah Khan on behalf of the Bengal National Chamber of Labour. It was pertinently contended on behalf of the Unions concerned that according to the Government Order of reference all the workmen employed in all the mills involved in the reference were represented by the five Unions specifically mentioned in the Order, and the Government by its Order contemplated a process of collective representation of all the workmen by these five Unions, and the five Unions would be entitled to represent all the workmen jointly and severally irrespective of the question as to whether a particular demand was put forward by one or more Unions and not by other Unions. On giving careful consideration to the question we have come to the conclusion that Sree S. Chaudhury's contention is not sound and the correct position is that the Unions appearing before us represent all the workmen of all the mills involved in the reference irrespective of the question as to whether a particular issue has been raised by one Union and not by the others. A contrary interpretation of the Order of reference would lead to absurdities. We, therefore, held that our eventual Award in respect of a question like this which has been raised by one Union appearing before us will be binding on all concerned.

25(2). Let us now pass on to the subject-matter of the issue. Sree Shib Nath Banerji being the Union representative responsible for putting forward this particular demand was naturally the principal spokesman. He referred to the resolution passed by the Tripartite Industries Conference held in December, 1947, which laid down agreed principles about the setting up of Central, Regional and Unit Production Committees and for settlement of disputes between the management and labour with the help of Works Committees, and certain other matters, and which adopted the dominating principle of an industrial truce for the next three years. Sree Shib Nath Banerji, however, contended that the contemplated Production Committees and the Works Committees would not be enough for the purpose he had in mind, and his central point with regard to the issue under consideration was that there should be a 50 per cent. representation of labour on all Committees of management under which the manager would function. The position not being clear from the written statement filed by the Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union, we asked Sree Shib Nath Banerji to submit a fresh statement in elucidation of his point. He eventually submitted a statement on the following lines—"We have been demanding a share in the management and in the administration. The Works Committees are not meant for this at all. Production Units as accepted in the recent Industrial Conference, would be a move in the direction, but they do not go far enough. Workers' representatives should be taken in all Committees for the management of all processes of production, distribution, costing, accounting, and all other matters concerned in the industry. This is demanded in all industries, whether nationalised or not. Active co-operation of workers in all these is absolutely necessary for efficiency and smooth running of the industry. Representation of workers and mill's authorities to be equal." The gist of the demand put forward by the Union, therefore, is a system of participation by the employees in the actual functioning of the management. The contention is that representatives of the employees should take part in the matter of decisions with regard to all kinds of problems—managerial, commercial, financial or otherwise. In other words, the demand means the setting up of a system of joint management and of giving the status of the employer to representatives elected or selected by the employees.

25(3). It has been strongly contended by the learned Counsel on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association that a dispute of this nature is not an industrial dispute and, therefore, this Tribunal has no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. We must, therefore, proceed to decide first whether this dispute is an industrial dispute within the meaning of section 2(k) of the Industrial Disputes Act. There is no manner of doubt that it is a dispute between employers and workmen. But in order that this dispute may constitute an industrial dispute within the meaning of the Act, it must be shown that it is connected with the employment or non-employment or the terms of employment, or with the conditions of labour, of any person. It is obvious that this dispute can have no connection with the employment or non-employment of any person, or with the conditions of labour of any person. The question remains to be considered as to whether this dispute can have even any remote connection with the terms of employment. We agree that in order to establish the connection it is not necessary that the subject-matter of the dispute should be or be related to any existing term of employment, and it would be enough if the connection can be established with what should be the terms of employment according to the workmen. Sree S. K. Basu, on behalf of the Jute Mill Workers' Federation, has contended that this dispute involves the question of setting up of joint committees of management, on which labour should be represented in a certain proportion, and this dispute should be held to be connected with the terms of employment. The central factor in the demand being a right of participation in the functions of management and control of the entire concern in all its aspects, it really amounts to a process of partial usurpation of the functions of the employer by the employees. It is seriously questionable whether a matter of this kind can legitimately form the subject-matter of a contract governing the relations between the employer and the employees or in other words whether such a matter can be a possible term of employment at all. "Employment". within the meaning of section 2(k) of the Industrial Disputes Act, must necessarily mean "employment as a workman under the employer". On giving very careful consideration to the whole question we come to the conclusion that a matter of this kind cannot be or be connected with any term of employment, and, therefore, cannot be the subject-matter of an industrial dispute. We feel that the demand really aims at a process of reorganisation and remodelling of the present-day social structure, so far as the relations between employers and employees are concerned and while such a matter can be a fit subject of a Tripartite Conference like the one held in December, 1947, or similar Conferences, it cannot constitute an industrial dispute within the meaning of the Industrial Disputes Act. In the result, we hold that this Tribunal has no jurisdiction to deal with the subject-matter of the issue under consideration, and we must, therefore, decline to give any direction on the subject.

ISSUE No. 25.—Relieving Clerks and Filling up of Vacancies.

26. The next subject for our consideration is Issue No. 25 relating to certain demands put forward by the Bansberia Mill Employees' Union representing clerks, compounders and Gurkha durwans working in Ganges Manufacturing Co., Ltd., Banberia, district Hooghly, on the subjects of relieving clerks and filling up of vacancies. We take up the question of relieving clerks first. The demand put forward is on the following lines:—"At least 15 per cent. of the total number of clerks to be provided and trained in different departments". We have been told by the representative of the Union concerned that there is already a system of relieving clerks, the strength of such clerks being 10 per cent. of the total number of clerks. It has been contended on behalf of the Union that Bansberia being a malarious area, the absentees are often too many, and the strength of relieving clerks should be raised to 15 per cent. of the total. We understand that there is no system of relieving clerks in any other jute mill. After hearing all parties, we are not satisfied that there is any adequate ground for directing an increase in the strength of relieving clerks as obtaining in the Ganges Manufacturing Mill at Bansberia. We, therefore, reject this claim.

26(1). The next item to be considered under this issue is the question of vacancies to be filled up with competent persons without delay. The representative of the Employees' Union concerned have made a complaint that vacancies are often left unfilled, and the burden of the work of absentees has to be taken by those who continue to work. We have not heard any similar complaint from any other concern and we do not quite follow what is really meant by putting forward this claim on the subject of filling up of vacancies. The principle enunciated in the demand is, however, correct, and we are disposed to support it. We accordingly direct that vacancies should be filled up with competent persons without any unreasonable delay.

ISSUE No. 27.—Nationalisation of Jute Textile Industry.

28. We shall now skip over Issue No. 26 relating to specific cases of victimisation, proceedings in respect of which have been stayed at the instance of the High Court of Calcutta, and pass on to consider Issue No. 27 on the subject of nationalisation of the Jute Textile Industry. This issue has been raised only by the Howrah Zilla Chatkal Mazdoor Union. In the written statement the claim was expressed in an extremely concise form and to elucidate the nature of the claim, Sri Shibnath Banerji, President of the Union, subsequently expressed the claim on the following lines:—"All the jute mills of West Bengal should be nationalised immediately. The jute mills belong to the nation, and as such, the profit made by the mills should be counted as national wealth. The mill authorities have got no right to utilise the profit made by the sweat of the labourers. Three lacs of workers should not be exploited by a few employers. On the other hand, in order to make a nation strong it is essential to nationalise the industry. If the question of compensation is raised, we submit that the shareholders who have not yet got the double amount of their share money may claim some, but others have absolutely no claim." During the hearing the representatives of all the Unions have supported the claim Sri Shibnath Banerji was naturally the first spokesman with regard to this subject. He referred us to Resolution No. II passed in the Tripartite Industries Conference held in December, 1947. By this resolution the conference recommends to Govrnment that while enunciating the national policy of industrial development, some important aspects, among others, should be kept in view. One of the aspects, which has been given specific shape in the resolution, is the division of industries into three broad categories, namely, (a) industries which should be under State ownership and management, (b) industries which may be jointly owned and managed by the State and private enterprise and (c) industries owned and managed by private enterprise. The resolution has further laid down that in selecting the industries as aforesaid which will be reviewed from time to time the paramount consideration will be the country's basic, economic and defence requirements on the one hand and the possibility of quick and efficient production on the other. It appears that in the subsequent final declaration of the industrial policy of the Government of India, in pursuance of the resolutions passed in the Tripartite Industries Conference, the Jute Textile Industry comes within the category of industries owned and managed by private enterprise, and at no stage of the deliberations does it appear to have been considered as a fit subject under the head of nationalisation. Sri Shibnath Banerji speaking on the claim put forward, however, has pressed for the inclusion of the Jute Textile Industry in the list of nationalised industries. Sri S. K. Basu, Advocate, for the Jute Mill Workers' Federation, has argued that the subject of nationalisation can be considered under two heads, namely, (1) State ownship, and (2) State control over or State management of industries. In pursuance of this line of argument Sri S. K. Basu has conceded that the question of State ownership is perhaps beyond the scope of the Tribunal. He has, however, contended that a question of State control or State management in collaboration with private enterprise comes within the scope of an industrial dispute. His contention is that State control over the Jute Textile Industry is necessary in order that the welfare measures for which the Unions have pressed may be carried out fully and properly. Sri Indrajit Gupta for the Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union has pressed for complete State ownership of the industry, and has contended that the control and management should be shared by the State and by workers' representatives. All these of course are contentions raised by the different Unions in favour of the claim for nationalisation. The primary question before the Tribunal however is whether this claim is an industrial dispute within the meaning of section 2(k) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. In other words the question is whether this dispute or difference between employers and workmen can be said to be connected with the employment or non-employment or the terms of employment or with the conditions of labour of any person. As regards State ownership the claim really amounts to a plea for a change of employers. As regards State control or management, the claim means a plea for partial usurpation of the functions of the employers by another body, namely, the State. We see no connection between this dispute and any question of employment or non-employment. We are also not satisfied that this claim could conceivably be incorporated in the contract of service, or could be one of the terms of employment. Sri S. K. Basu appears to argue that the subject of State control is an industrial dispute in so far as it involves a dispute between employers and workmen in respect of the conditions of labour in the mill. We are unable to accept this view, and we fail to see any connection between the claim for State ownership or for State control and the conditions of labour. Apart from these fundamental considerations arising from the definition of an industrial dispute, another prominent feature in the proceedings with regard to this issue is that the State which is supposed to be called upon to take the ownership or the control of the industry is not represented before us. Taking into consideration all aspects of the question we come to the conclusion that the subject-matter of this issue of nationalisation cannot constitute an industrial dispute. We feel that in the absence of proper and adequate materials we are unable to make any helpful recommendation either. We are of opinion that this is a proper subject for discussion by the parties concerned assembled in conferences like the Tripartite Industries Conference held in December, 1947, and it will not be proper for the Tribunal to make any recommendation on the subject in view of the position that this Tribunal has no jurisdiction to deal with the issue at all. We, therefore, leave the issue without giving any direction or making any recommendation.

ISSUE No. 28.—Re-absorption of Workmen in Mills Derequisitioned.

29. We next take up Issue No. 28 relating to the question of re-absorption of workmen in certain jute mills which were requisitioned by the Government during the War and which are being released from requisition from time to time. This claim has been put forward only by the Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union in its written statement. During the hearing, however, the representatives of other Unions also supported the claim. The claim as originally put forward by the Bengal Chatkal Mazdoor Union is on the following lines:—"Although the War is long over, nearly 1/3rd of the mills requisitioned at that time for military purposes have not yet been handed back for production. We demand that all such mills should be reopened without further delay, that their original workers who were absorbed into other units known as foster mills should be re-absorbed in their respective mills with their service record intact." The original prayer was to cause the reopening of requisitioned mills. The Tribunal felt that it had no hand in the matter of releasing particular mills from orders of requisition, but it could consider the question of re-absorption of workmen in mills which happened to be derequisitioned under the orders of the Government. We shall accordingly take up the question of re-absorption of workmen in the original mills which may happen to be released from requisition. In this connection our attention has been drawn to a Bengal Government Communique published in the Statesman, dated 11th December, 1943. Some principal features of the Government Communique are on the following lines:—

"Arrangements have been made, where some mills have closed, to work certain others in a double shift. This has been managed in such a way that those employed in the closed mills will be provided with work in some other adjacent mills. There will be no break of service in the transfer and both the previous service and the new service will count. Weavers, spinners and other workers will be provided with similar work in the new place of work and wages and earnings will generally be maintained at their former rates. The Government give the following assurances:—(1) that the new hours of work will be fixed after paying due regard to all reasonable requests of workers, (2) service, earnings, allowances and other privileges will be maintained, and (3) those who accept this arrangement will be provided with employment in the old mill when that is again available." The present claim which has been put forward before us relates to item (3) in the list of assurances given by the Government. It appears that the workmen concerned with this question of re-absorption in the original mills may be divided into two categories, namely, (1) those original workers of the requisitioned mills who have been actually employed in the foster mills, and (2) those workers of the requisitioned mills who presented themselves for service in the foster mills but could not be provided with employment in the latter. We do not think those workers of the requisitioned mills who did not present themselves for service in the foster mills can be considered for re-absorption in the original mills after derequisition. As regards the claim of the original workers of requisitioned mills who happened to be employed in the faster mills to be re-absorbed in the original mills after derequisition, the Indian Jute Mills' Association has conceded that the claim should be granted. The difficulty arises in connection with those workers of the original mills who presented themselves for employment in the foster mills but were either refused service or could not be provided with the same for some reason or other. It is admitted by both sides that only those who presented themselves for service but were refused or could not be provided could claim re-absorption in the original mills. In the course of the discussion the question pre-eminently arose as to how workers of this description could be properly and adequately identified. Sri S. K. Basu, Advocate, on behalf of the Jute Mill Workers' Federation, has argued that a workman should be re-absorbed in the original mill after derequisition, as soon as he says that he previously worked in that mill, and it is found that he has had previous experience of the work, and there is a vacancy. The learned Counsel on behalf of the Indian Jute Mills' Association has controverted this proposition regarding identification and has contended that a certain amount of strictness of proof should be insisted on, and he has contended that there should be some way of establishing that the particular workman actually worked in the original mill and that he offered his services in the foster mill but was not eventually employed in the latter. In, course of the hearing we have heard of tokens having been given to workmen of this description and of other possible links for establishing identity and the parties were requested to let us have further information on these aspects of the matter. Ultimately, however, the parties failed to supply any further information, and we are consequently unable to specify any particular method of establishing the identity. We are of opinion that the particular workman who wishes to be re-absorbed in his alleged original mill after derequisition should be able to prove that he worked in the original mill and that he offered his services in the foster mill but was not provided with work. We cannot indicate the method by which this can be established. But we feel that if the management of the original mill is reasonably and sympathetically inclined to look into the cases of such workmen, some links on the question of identity may be available from the books maintained in the mill concerned. It is hoped that the evidence, either oral or otherwise, which may be given by a particular workman claiming to be re-absorbed will be supplemented by other helpful evidence which may be available in the mill office concerned.

ISSUE No. 29.—The Case of Prabartak Jute Mills.

30. We have now come to the last issue, namely, Issue No. 29 relating to the case of Prabartak Jute Mills. This concern, though not a member of the Indian Jute Mills' Association, allowed itself to be represented generally by the Association, but submitted a separate written statement with the prayer that it being essentially a part of a philanthropic organisation named Prabartak Sangha with no motive for profit-making, and it being an uneconomic unit in the Jute Textile Industry, its case should be dealt with separately in order that it may survive. We have heard the spokesmen of this concern and have inspected the mill and seen things for ourselves and have carefully considered the state of things from all points of view. The Prabartak Sangha is a mission of life, founded on spiritual consciousness. It consists of a band of men and women who have dedicated their lives to the service of humanity. The aim of the Sangha is to reconstruct the cultural, social and economic life of the country on the basis of self-realisation. The workers of the Prabartak Sangha own no personal property or money; they work for the one and the same object in a spirit of service. Whatever they earn come to the common fund to be spent for the welfare of community. Apart from the educational and philanthropic institutions run by the Prabartak Sangha in different places, it has established an economic structure upon which to build and expand its trading, industrial, commercial and agricultural concerns. The Prabartak Jute Mills constitute one of the industrial concerns under the management of the Prabartak Trust, Ltd., which is entrusted with the task of carrying on the economic programme of the mission. We are satisfied that this is not a profit-making concern, and the fundamental basis of its existence is the ideal of service and sacrifice, and the authorities have no idea of exploiting the workers.

30(1). It will be pertinent to examine briefly the financial condition and possibilities of this unique small concern whose outlook is so very different from that of other concerns in the industry. It was registered in 1936, and the work was actually started in 1941 with only 50 hessian looms. At the time of our inspection we saw only 60 hessian looms working, and 12 looms lying idle and with no arrangements for sacking production at all. In spite of its efforts, it has not yet succeeded in getting adequate machinery, and jute cuttings and other rejections cannot be utilised for want of sacking machinery. On examination of the balance-sheets we find, that the profits from the jute mill itself, when profits accrued at all, were very meagre, and the funds of the concern were supplemented by some profits from a gunny business carried on by the director-manager Sri D. N. Chaudhury. We are satisfied that this concern has carried on a hand-to-mouth existence in the face of serious handicaps, and it is definitely an uneconomic unit in the industry. In view of its philanthropic ideal and its precarious economic existence, we are of opinion that the prayer of the Prabartak Jute Mills for separate treatment is fully justified and we have no doubt that if this concern is dealt with in our award on the same lines as the others, this economic limb of a useful philanthropic organisation will have no alternative but to die. We have, therefore, decided to give separate directions in respect of the Prabartak Jute Mills, leaving several matters to be decided by the employers in a spirit of cordial relationship with the employees, and we trust that the employees will feel imbued with a spirit of service to the community and will heartily co-operate with the employers in evolving schemes consistently with the continued existence and prosperity of the concern.

30(2). We may now proceed to state briefly the principles which we propose to apply in the case of this individual concern. We shall deal with those of the preceding issues in respect of which we have given directions or made recommendations, and indicate our special directions with regard to the subject-matter of each of those issues in respect of the Prabartak Jute Mills, stating, where necessary, the extent to which or the manner in which we have decided to deviate from the general directions. Before we do that, it will be useful to make a few comments with regard to some of the important issues. The scheme of standardised occupational nomenclature as per Appendix IV under Issue No. 2 should apply to the Prabartak Jute Mills. There is no difficulty in applying the nomenclature in spite of the fact that many of the occupations do not exist, and sometimes two or more occupations are combined in one individual in this mill. As regards the minimum basic wages under Issue No. 3, we are definitely of opinion that the minimum of Rs.26 per month of 208 hours for the lowest paid manual worker should apply to this mill, as we feel that no individual can work on an economic plane lower than the bare subsistence level, and we trust that even this small unit will be able to pull up its resources to meet this minimum human requirement. As regards piece-rates and time-rates for manual workers above the lowest paid categories, we notice that this mill has its own system including a sort of production bonus in the weaving department, and we prefer to leave to the employers the task of determining appropriate piece-rates and time-rates for the other manual workers consistently with the standard of minimum wages fixed by us and keeping in view appropriate standards of differentials. As regards clerical workers, we have fixed Rs.55 per month to be the minimum basic wages under Issue No. 3. We notice that in the Prabartak Jute Mills there are clerical workers on Rs.25 or Rs.30 as the starting pay. This standard is much too low. We think, however, that a standard of minimum basic wages to the extent of Rs.55 per month for clerical workers may be too high for this mill. We have, therefore, decided to fix Rs.45 per month as the minimum basic wages for clerical workers of this concern. We prefer to leave to the employers of the concern the task of deciding upon appropriate and fair scales and grades for clerical workers, on the basis of Rs.45 per month as the minimum starting basic wages for the lowest grade clerks. As regards the question of dearness allowance under Issue No. 6, we notice that at present the dearness allowance allowed to clerical workers in the Prabartak Jute Mills is Rs.20 per month apart from subsidised rations, two units being supplied to married workers, and that allowed to manual workers, is Rs.4-8 per week as amenity allowance plus about Re.1-8 per week representing the cash value of food concessions. We do not propose any change in the present standards of dearness allowance in this concern. We had the opportunity of ascertaining the wishes of the workers whom we met as regards the food ration shop and we heard no complaint whatever. We accordingly direct that the food ration shop in this mill shall be maintained, subject to efficient management in the interest of the workers. As regards the question of bonus under Issue No. 7 we have given no directions at present, and we do not wish to say anything with regard to the Prabartak Jute Mills, the authorities of which will have the liberty of making a fair decision as regards the continuance of the Puja bonus which the clerical workers appear to be getting now. As regards our directions or recommendations under certain other issues as set forth in the succeeding paragraph of this Award, we are of opinion [illegible] there should be no difficulty in applying them to the Prabartak Jute Mills, and we shall direct accordingly.

30(3). In the result, we give the following directions in respect of the Prabartak Jute Mills:—

The scheme of standardised occupational nomenclature under Issue No. 2 shall apply. The minimum basic wages for manual workers and for clerical workers under Issue No. 3 shall be Rs.26 per month of 208 hours and Rs.45 per month, respectively. The piece-rates under Issue No. 4 for manual workers and the time-rates under Issue No. 5 for manual workers other than the lowest paid, and the scales and grades of basic wages for clerical workers shall be determined by the employers in a spirit of cordial relationship with the employees consistently with the financial capacity of the concern, and with the minimum basic standards fixed by us. As regards dearness allowance under Issue No. 6, the present standards of dearness allowance consisting of dearness allowance proper or amenity allowance and the value of food concessions may be maintained. The present food ration shop shall be maintained with efficiency. Our directions regarding involuntary unempolyment under Issue No. 8 and the employment of women workers under Issue No. 10, the directions and recommendations regarding contract labour and sardar system under Issue No. 11, the directions regarding Standing Orders and other rules of service under Issue No. 12, leave, maternity leave and holidays under Issue No. 13, provident fund, gratuity and pension under Issue No. 14, medical facilities under Issue No. 16, working conditions and sanitary arrangements under Issue No. 17, cheap canteens under Issue No. 18, rest and recreation under Issue No. 19, free supply of implements and uniforms under Issue No. 22 and revision of the system of recording attendance under Issue No. 23, and our recommendations regarding housing under Issue No. 15 and educational facilities under Issue No. 21 shall apply.

Paragraphs 16 to 16(8).—The problems of industrial housing and of the employer's responsibility in this connection discussed in the light of the Reports of the Royal Commission on Labour and of the Labour Investigation Committee and the deliberations of the Standing Labour Committee and the Industrial Housing Sub-Committee. The five-year labour programme of the Government of India and the resolution on the Government of India's industrial policy, dated 6th April 1948, considered. The Tribunal thereupon refrains from giving any directions at the present stage on the subject of housing for the industrial labour in the Jute Textile Industry. It, however, requests the Government to take up the question of housing of the jute mill labour in West Bengal as early as possible. It further recommends that the employers of the jute mills should push forward their building programmes and abolish the back-to-back huts and replace them by better houses as quickly as practicable.

Claim for house allowance not allowed at present.

ISSUE No. 16.—Revision of medical facilities.

Paragraphs 17 to 17(6).—(1) The circumstances leading to the enactment of the Employees' State Insurance Act, 1948, and its provisions discussed. As the State has alredy taken up the matter of improving the medical facilities available to industrial workers generally and to jute mill workers in particular, the Tribunal does not lay down any hard and fast rules in regard to medical facilities to be carried out by the employers. The Tribunal has, however, made certain recommendations for maintenance and improvement of the existing hospitals and dispensaries till the new Insurance Act comes into full operation and the existing medical facilities become superfluous or merge in the new scheme under the Act.

ISSUE No. 21.—Arrangement for educational facilities for adult workers and their children.

Paragraphs 22 to 22(5).—The responsibility of employers for provision of educational facilities for workmen and their children discussed. As the Provincial Government has already taken up the matter in hand in pursuance of a general scheme of advancement of education for the entire community, the Tribunal refrains from formulating any scheme. ISSUE No. 23.—Revision of the system of recording attendance.

Paragraphs 25 to 25(3).—The Tribunal holds that it has no jurisdiction to deal with the subject-matter of the issue and declines to give any direction on the subject.

ISSUE No. 26.—Specific cases of victimisation.

Stayed by the High Court of Calcutta.

ISSUE No. 27.—Nationalisation of Jute Textile Industry.

Paragraph 28.—The Tribunal decides that the subject-matter of this issue of nationalisation of Jute Textile Industry cannot constitute an industrial dispute and that it has no jurisdiction to deal with the issue. It, therefore, declines to give any direction or make any recommendation.

ISSUE No. 28.—Re-absorption of workmen in mills derequisitioned.

Paragraphs 29 to 29(1).—In paragraph 29(1) the Tribunal gives directions on the subject of re-absorption of workmen in derequisitioned mills under conditions as laid down therein.

ISSUE No. 29.—The case of Prabartak Jute Mills.

Paragraphs 30 to 30(3).—The Tribunal decides that the case of Prabartak Jute Mills should be dealt with separately. The minimum basic wages for manual workers and for clerical workers in the Prabartak Jute Mills shall be Rs.26 and Rs.45 per month, respectively. Piece-rates and time-rates for manual workers other than the lowest paid and scales and grades for clerical workers to be determined by the employers. Present standards of dearness allowance may be maintained. The present food ration shop shall be maintained. The Tribunal's directions and recommendations in other respects as set forth in paragraph 30(3) shall apply to the Prabartak Jute Mills.

Conclusion.

32. We would like to add a few words in conclusion. First of all, our thanks are due to the representatives and lawyers of the Unions appearing on behalf of the workers and the representatives and lawyers appearing on behalf of the employers for the valuable assistance they have rendered to us throughout the proceedings. As regards the award, we have found certain issues to be outside our jurisdiction, apart from two issues in respect of which the proceedings have been stayed by an order of the High Court of Calcutta. With regard to certain other important issues like bonus, housing, etc., we have not been able to give any directions at the present stage, in view of the position that decisions on such subjects should wait till fuller materials as the result of current investigations by experts and by the Governments concerned are available. We have formulated schemes of standardisation as regards piece-rates and time-rates for different categories of workers, on the basis of rather inadequate materials made available to us, and we do not claim perfection for these schemes. Necessary modifications in the future will be facilitated by the experience gained both by the workers' Unions and the employers. We have been able to fix the minimum basic wages and dearness allowance constituting the minimum total emolument of the lowest paid manual worker at Rs.58-8 per month which together with the employers' contribution of Rs.1-10 to the provident fund will throw a burden of Rs.60-2 per month on the employer in respect of each lowest paid manual worker. We believe this standard compares very favourably, from the workers' point of view, with standards recommended or awarded for other concerns in recent times. We are conscious that we have not been able to go far enough or as far as we would wish, as our hands were necessarily restricted by various other factors which we were bound to consider in the interest not only of the industry and its constituent units but also of the vast population of workers themselves. We realise that the interest of the two are intrinsically bound up together, and we hope both will cultivate the same realisation, and each will act in furtherance of the interest of the other. It was absolutely necessary to make a start regarding fixation of the minimum emolument, standardisation and other subjects. We have given a start on the path of progress and have laid the first milestone at a considerable distance ahead. As we have already indicated, the rest of the path may be covered by a few more milestones to be laid by way of conciliation or adjudication or through any other convenient machinery in the future. We advise the workers, in all sincerity, to be patient and to proceed by gradual stages towards the goal, in a spirit of co-operation with the employers, and we equally advise the employers to adjust themselves, in good grace, to the new burdens imposed by this award, and to try their best to move further forward for the amelioration of the condition of the workers. On the present occasion we have been unable to go far enough for the simple reason that a sudden long jump would throw the industry out of gear to the serious detriment of the cause of the workers themselves. We therefore appeal to both sides to accept the award in the spirit in which it is given, independently of the position that it is binding on them, as we believe that a process of psychological reconciliation is a greater force than mere coercion. We are presenting this award to both sides with an invitation to be reconciled and to co-operate in furtherance of a better standard of living for the workers, and we trust that mutual heart-to-heart co-operation, and not barren antagonism will open the door leading to the ultimate achievement of the goal through a series of adjustments. Meanwhile the only reasonable and beneficial course for the workers to adopt is to put their shoulders to the wheel with wholeheartedness and perfect sincerity and do everything in their power to step up production in their own interests and in the interests of the country as a whole. We can maintain our hard-earned independence only if our workers become determined to act in furtherance of a set policy of stepping up production to the farthest limit, which will have the effect of keeping down the price levels and giving to the workers the full value of their increased emoluments in the actual process of living. If profit-sharing bonus and other amenities are being aimed at, the best course is to step up production and thus to facilitate the accrual of substantial profits, large slices of which will be available for carrying out an all-round programme of achieving a high standard of living. We wish to impress on the workers that the world is best run on an ideal of "live and let live" and in order that the workers may hope to live in comfort and greater comfort the fountain producing the streams of comfort must be allowed to live and must be kept running with its full force and volume and must not be allowed to dry up to any extent. We hope this award will be helpful in establishing and maintaining peace and concord in the Jute Textile Industry in West Bengal, and we close with the hope that both employers and employees in the industry will act in a spirit of mutual forbearance and will prosper in an atmosphere of goodwill and peace.

Fractions—½″ or over will count as one inch.

7. Variation for Cloth Weight—

Formula to be applied for variation in cloth weights.

Standard width is 40 inches. Any fabric other than 40" must be brought to 40" weight basis.

Formula is—

$$\frac{\text{Porter} + \text{Shots}}{2} - 1{\cdot}5 = \text{Weight standard.}$$

Each half ounce up or down on the weight standard represents ·25 per cent. to be added to or deducted from the base rate.

Examples—

Hessian; 40" 12 ozs. 11×12

$$\left(\frac{11+12}{2} - 1{\cdot}5\right) = 10$$

$$12 - 10 = 2$$

∴ 1% to be added.

$$\left(\frac{9+10}{2} - 1{\cdot}5\right) = 8$$

$$8 - 8 = 0$$

∴ No variation.

$$\left(\frac{11+15}{2} - 1{\cdot}5\right) = 11{\cdot}5$$

$$15 - 11{\cdot}5 = 3{\cdot}5$$

∴ 1·75 per cent. to be added.

Where cloth is woven for Hessian Bags contract weight per yard will be arrived at as follows:—

$$\frac{\text{Bag Weight}}{\text{Cut length per bag in yards (including 3" allowance for hemming).}}$$

8. All adjustments are on a percentage basis and are expressed in terms of the requisite base rate for the standard fabric.

It follows that it is not necessary to make a separate calculation for each adjustment in terms of the base rate.

The percentages applicable for each adjustment may be added to arrive at one percentage total to cover all adjustments necessary.

This percentage total, applied to the requisite base rate for the standard fabric, and added to, or deducted from, the base rate as the case may be, will give the desired rate for the fabric in question.

9. All rates are in annas per cut, laid 100 yards, and are calculated to two places of decimals correct.

10. Fabrics catered for are ordinarily Hessian fabrics with single warp and weft, of porter and shooting within the range of the tables given, and worked in ordinary looms within the range of the reed spaces detailed, one weaver one loom.

7. Variation in Cloth Weight.—

Formula to be applied for variation in cloth weight.

Standard width is 28″.

Any fabric other than 28″ must be brought to 28″ weight basis.

Formula :—

$$\frac{\text{Porter}+\text{Shots}}{2}+6=\text{Weight standard.}$$

Each half ounce up or down on the weight standard represents ·4 per cent. to be added to or deducted from the base rate.

Examples :— 24" 16 ozs. 8×8

$$\left(\frac{8+8}{2}\right)+6=14 \text{ weight standard.}$$

24"=16 ozs ∴ 28"=18·67 ozs.

$$\frac{4\cdot67}{\cdot50}\times\cdot4\%=3\cdot74\% \text{ to be added.}$$

30" 15 ozs. 8×9

30"=15 ozs. ∴ 28"=14 ozs.

$$\frac{\cdot50}{\cdot50}\times\cdot4\%=\cdot4\% \text{ to be deducted.}$$

Where cloth is woven for Sacking Bags contract weight per yard will be arrived at as follows:—

$$\frac{\text{Bag Weight}}{\text{Cut length per bag in yards (including 3" allowance for Hemming or 1" allowance for unhemmed bags).}}$$

8. All adjustments are on a percentage basis and are expressed in terms of the base rate for the standard fabric. It follows that it is not necessary to make a separate calculation for each adjustment in terms of the base rate. The percentages applicable for each adjustment may be added to arrive at one percentage total to cover all adjustments necessary.

This percentage total, applied to the base rate for the standard fabrics, and added to, or deducted from, the base rate as the case may be, will give the desired rate for the fabric in question.

9. All rates are in annas per cut laid 100 yards and are calculated to two places of decimals correct.

10. Fabrics catered for are ordinary Sacking Plains fabrics, with double warp and single weft, of porter and shotting within the range of the tables provided, and worked in ordinary looms within the range of the reed spaces detailed, one weaver one loom.

7. Variation in Cloth Weight.—

Formula to be applied for variation in cloth weights.

Standard width is 26½".

Any fabric other than 26½" must be brought to 26½" width basis.

$$\left\{\frac{(\text{Porter}+50\%)+\text{Shots}}{2}\right\}+6=\text{weight standard.}$$

30"=18·00 ozs. ∴ 26½"=15·90 ozs.

$$\frac{\cdot50}{\cdot50}\times \cdot60= \cdot6\% \text{ to be deducted.}$$

APPENDIX VII.

(See Issue No. 8.)

Copy of letter No. L-1891, dated 12th June 1944, from the Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, Department of Labour, to all Provincial Governments, etc.

Compensation for involuntary unemployment due to shortage of coal, raw materials or changes in lines of production.

I am to invite attention to the discussion on the above subject at the Tripartite Labour Conference held in September 1943. It has not been easy to evolve precise proposals in this matter in view of the difference on some points apparent at the discussion and the need to meet varying conditions to which the proposals may apply. Proposals for compensation for involuntary unemployment of the kind referred to have to be considered not only with reference to possible schemes of unemployment insurance, but also with reference to the obligation of Governments to grant relief where found necessary.

2. The Government of India feel that while it is not possible to propound a fully co-ordinated scheme in this respect which can be statutorily imposed, it is advisable that they should formulate certain principles which may suitably be considered by Provincial Governments and employers when occasion arises. The adoption of measures on the lines of those in the Annexure by all concerned would achieve a desirable uniformity in India. The Governments of individual States represented at the Labour Conference are also being apprised of the Government of India's proposals.

3. I am to add that the Government of India will act on the principles stated in the Annexure, in respect of their own industrial establishments.

Annexure.

(1) Kinds of unemployment covered.

(a) The proposals relate only to short-term unemployment, during the period of the war due to shortage of coal or raw materials or changes in lines of production of which adequate notice cannot be given.

(b) The proposals do not cover closures of factories or of departments due to special Government orders.

(c) The proposals do not cover closures of which adequate notice is given under Standing Orders, whether statutory or voluntary.

(2) Benefits to be given.

(a) Benefit which should be on a scale lower than the ordinary rate of pay may be fixed in either of two ways:—

(i) Seventy-five per cent. of the ordinary rate of pay for first fortnight of unemployment and 50 per cent. of the ordinary rate of pay for the second fortnight of unemployment with possibly a flat rate of benefit for persons drawing lower levels of income.

(ii) A flat rate which would be about 75 per cent. of the average of lower range of wages rates in the undertaking.

(b) Duration of benefit should be one month in each half year, allowing for a waiting period of 7 days (benefit however to start from the first day of unemployment provided the unemployment lasts longer than the waiting period).

(c) This special unemployment benefit will not qualify a worker for bonuses determined by reference to earnings over any period.

(d) The cost of benefits will be admitted as revenue expenditure for income-tax and Excess Profit Tax purposes.

(3) Conditions attached to benefit.

(a) To qualify for benefit a worker must answer to a muster roll once a day at his usual place of employment or, with the permission of the employer, at any other place.

(b) A worker will be ineligible for benefit if he unreasonably refuses work even of a different sort in his usual factory or (provided employment offered is in the same locality) by transfer from one department to another in the same undertaking or industry (or from one industry to another). In case of dispute whether an objection to transfer was reasonable or not, an authority designated by the Provincial Government shall decide finally. For the transfer of Labour from one industry to another use will be made of the Employment Exchanges in respect of skilled and semi-skilled personnel and in the unskilled labour Supply Committee in respect of unskilled labour.

(c) The employer will not be entitled to discharge during the benefit period any worker who has been in continuous employment with the same employer or in the same industry in that locality for a period of not less than three months.

(4) Benefit by whom given.

The liability to pay benefit will be on the employer.

(5) Industries covered.

All industries should be covered whether engaged on war industry or otherwise.

(6) Methods of ensuring payment of benefit.

A Province (or State) should use its good offices or conciliatory powers to persuade employers to pay: though in suitable cases disputes in this regard can be referred to adjudication under Defence of India Rule 81A.

Where voluntary agreement between the employer and the workers has been reached or where the Provincial Government is satisfied as to the detailed measures of benefit necessary, the agreement or the details could be embodied in an order to be passed under Defence of India Rule 81A (1) (b) after consultation in individual cases with the Central Government.

The State Governments will utilise the appropriate legal machinery available to them.

Copy of letter No. L-1891, dated 1st March 1946, from the Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, Department of Labour, to all Provincial Governments, etc.

Compensation for involuntary unemployment due to shortage of coal, raw materials or changes in the lines of production.

I am directed to invite attention to this department letters No. L-1891, dated 12th June 1944 and 9th November 1945, on the above subject. As a result of consultations with the Provincial Governments and the employing departments of the Government of India, and of discussions at the Seventh Labour Conference held in November 1945 the Government of India have decided that the sub-clause (b) of clause 2 of the scheme detailed in Annexure to this department letter No. L-1891, dated 12th June 1944, should be amended to read as under:—

> "Duration of benefit should be one month in each half year. No benefit will be given in the half-yearly periods January to June or July to December until the number of days of involuntary unemployment has exceeded seven in the aggregate in the half year."

It has been further decided that the scheme should be retained till the war time controls are lifted and unemployment due to shortage of coal, raw materials, or changes in lines of production ceases to be of serious moment.

APPENDIX VIII.

(See Issue No. 12.)

FIRST PART.

Standing Orders.

1. These Orders shall come into force on

2. Classification of workmen—

(a) Workmen shall be classified as—

- (i) Permanent,
- (ii) Probationers,
- (iii) Badlis,
- (iv) Temporary,
- (v) Casual,
- (vi) Apprentices.

(b) A "permanent" workman is a workman who has been engaged on a permanent basis and includes any person who has satisfactorily completed a probationary period of three months in the same or another occupation in the industrial establishment, including breaks due to sickness, accident, leave, lock-out, strike (not being an illegal strike), or involuntary closure of the establishment.

(c) A "probationer" is a workman who is provisionally employed to fill a permanent vacancy in a post and has not completed three months' service therein. If a permanent employee is employed as a probationer in a new post he may, at any time during the probationary period, be reverted to his old permanent post.

(d) A "Badli" is a workman who is appointed in the post of a permanent workman or a probationer who is temporarily absent.

(e) A "temporary" workman is a workman who has been engaged for work which is of an essentially temporary nature likely to be finished within a limited period.

(f) A "casual" workman is a workman whose employment is of a casual nature.

(g) An "apprentice" is a learner who is paid an allowance during the period of his training.

3. Service Records and tickets.—(a) The establishment shall maintain Service Record Cards of standard size, wherein particulars of every workman, except a casual workman, shall be recorded. A standard Employment Book shall also be maintained by the establishment, on behalf of every workman, except a casual workman, wherein all particulars recorded on the Service Record Card shall also be entered. The form of the Service Record Card and the Employment Book, which should be identical in particulars, shall be as given in Appendix IX. Every workman, except a casual workman, shall be provided with the Employment Book which will serve as his personal record of employment in the jute mill industry. A casual workman shall be provided with a "casual workman's card" on which shall be entered the nature of the work done and the days on which he has worked in the establishment. The establishment shall maintain a Register of Service Record Cards showing the following columns: serial number, name, father's name, home address, date of first appointment and department, remarks. Serial numbers in the Register shall be shown on the corresponding Service Record Cards.

(b) Every workman shall be provided with a departmental ticket showing his class and number and serving the purpose of a token disc for identification, and shall, on being required to do so, show it to any person authorised by the manager to inspect it, or surrender it to any person authorised by the manager in this behalf.

(c) Loss of any employment book or of any departmental ticket shall immediately be notified to the manager. A duplicate shall be issued on payment of a reasonable sum by the workman concerned.

4. Publication of working time.—The periods and hours of work for all classes of workers in each shift shall be exhibited in English and in the principal languages of the workmen employed in the establishment on notice boards maintained at or near the main entrance of the establishment and at the time-keeper's office, if any.

5. Publication of holidays and pay days.—Notices, specifying (a) the days observed by the establishment as holidays and (b) pay days, shall be posted on the said notice boards.

6. Publication of wage rates.—Notices, specifying the rates of wages payable to all classes of workmen and for all classes of work shall be displayed on the said notice boards.

7. Shift working.—More than one shift may be worked in a department or departments or any section of a department of the establishment at the discretion of the employer. If more than one shift is worked, the workman shall be liable to be transferred from one shift to another. No shift working shall be discontinued without one month's notice being given prior to such discontinuance, provided that no such notice will be necessary, if as a result of the discontinuance of the shift, no permanent workman will be discharged. If as a result of the discontinuance of the shift working any permanent workmen are to be discharged, they shall be discharged having regard to the length of their service in the establishment, those with the shortest term of service being discharged first. If shift working is restarted a week's notice thereof shall be given by posting a notice at the main entrance of the establishment and at the time-keeper's office, if any. The workman discharged as a result of the discontinuance of the shift shall, if they present themselves at the time of the restarting of the shift, have preference in being re-employed having regard to the length of their previous service in the establishment, those with the longest term of service being re-employed first.

8. Attendance and late coming.—All workmen shall be at work at the establishment at the time fixed and notified under paragraph 4 of these orders. Workmen attending late will be liable to the deduction provided for in the Payment of Wages Act, 1936. Any workman who after checking in is found to be absent from his proper place of work during working hours without permission or without sufficient reason shall be liable to be treated as absent without leave.

9. Leave and holidays.—(a) Holidays with pay will be allowed as provided in chapter IVA of the Factories Act, 1934, and other holidays in accordance with law, contract, custom and usage.

(b) A workman who desires to obtain leave of absence shall apply, through the head of the department, to the manager, who shall issue orders on the application within a week of its submission or two days prior to the commencement of the leave applied for, whichever is earlier, provided that if the leave applied for is to commence on the date of the application or within three days thereof, the order shall be given on the same day. If the leave asked for is granted, a leave pass shall be issued to the workman. If the leave is refused or postponed, the fact of such refusal or postponement and the reasons therefor shall be recorded in writing in a register to be maintained for the purpose, and if the workman so desires, a copy of the entry in the register shall be supplied to him. If the workman after proceeding on leave desires an extension thereof, he shall apply, through the head of the department, to the manager, who shall send a written reply either granting or refusing extension of leave to the workman, if his address is available and if such reply is likely to reach him before the expiry of the leave originally granted to him.

(c) If the workman remains absent beyond the period of leave originally granted or subsequently extended, he shall lose his lien on his appointment, unless he (1) returns within eight days of the expiry of the leave, and (2) explains to the satisfaction of the manager his inability to return before the expiry of his leave. In case the workman loses his lien on his appointment, he shall be entitled to be kept on the list of Badlis.

(d) A workman may be granted casual leave of absence with or without pay not exceeding ten days in the aggregate in a calendar year. Ordinarily previous permission of the head of the department in the establishment shall be obtained before such leave is taken, but when that is not possible, the head of the department shall, as soon as practicable, be informed in writing of the absence and of the probable duration of such absence.

10. Requirements to enter premises by certain gates and liability to search.—(a) All workmen shall enter and leave the mill premises only by the gates appointed for the purpose by the management. Mill gates may be kept closed during working hours at the discretion of the management and workmen must not leave the premises during working hours without permission.

(b) All workmen entering or leaving the mill, and at any time when special circumstances warrant it, are liable to be called upon by the works watchmen or other persons authorised by the management, to show that they are not in unauthorised possession of any property belonging to the company or any article prejudicial to the security of any person or property in the mill. In the case of female workmen, only women will be authorised to conduct the necessary investigation.

11. Payment of wages.—(a) Any wages, due to the workmen but not paid on the usual pay day on account of their being unclaimed, shall be paid by the employer on an unclaimed wage pay day in each week, which shall be notified on the notice boards as aforesaid.

(b) Wages due shall be paid daily, weekly, or monthly in accordance with the provisions of the Payment of Wages Act.

12. Stoppage of work.—(a) The employer may, at any time in the event of fire, catastrophe, breakdown of machinery, stoppage of power supply, epidemics, civil commotion, shortage of coal or of raw materials or of essential stores, changes in lines of production and other causes beyond his control, stop any section or sections of the establishment, wholly or partially, for any period or periods without notice.

(b) During such stoppage of work, a workman shall be entitled to payment at the rate of 50 per cent. of the basic wages and of the dearness allowance, and each workman shall continue to receive weekly rations at the normal subsidised rates or the cash value of the food concession. In the case of a workman paid at piece rates, the rate of wages should be taken to be the average wages of the preceding seven working days of such workman. The duration of the benefit shall be one month in each half year from January to June and July to December respectively. This benefit does not qualify a workman for bonuses determined by reference to earnings over any period.

(c) To qualify for the benefit during such stoppage of work, a workman must answer to a muster roll once a day at his usual place of employment or, with the permission of the employer, at any other place. A workman will be ineligible for the benefit if he unreasonably refuses work even of a different sort in his usual factory, or (provided the employment offered is in the same locality) by transfer from one department to another in the same undertaking, or from one jute mill to another. Nothing in this paragraph shall affect the right of the employer to discharge the workman, or the right of the workman to discharge himself, with due notice according to law and under paragraph 13 below.

(d) The employer may, in the event of a strike affecting either wholly or partially any section or department of the establishment, close down either wholly or partially such section or department and any other section or department affected by such closing down. The fact of such closure shall be notified by notices put upon the notice board in the section or department concerned, and in the time-keeper's office, if any, as soon as practicable. The workmen concerned shall also be notified by general notice, prior to resumption of work, as to when work will be resumed.

13. Termination of employment.—(a) For terminating employment a notice in writing shall be given either by the employer or by the workman for the periods noted below:—

In the case of monthly-paid permanent workmen, probationers and apprentices, one month's notice shall be necessary. In the case of permanent workmen, probationers and apprentices paid on any other basis, two weeks' notice shall be necessary. In the case of badli, whose period of employment for the time being has exceeded fourteen days continuously, seven days' notice shall be necessary; if the unexpired period of the present employment of a badli be less than seven days, the notice shall be for such unexpired period only. It will be optional for the employer to pay the wages for the notice period in lieu of notice. No notice shall be necessary in the case of temporary or casual workmen.

(b) Where the employment of any workman is terminated, all wages earned and unpaid shall be paid to him at the time of discharge, if convenient, or in any case within the period of time prescribed by the Payment of Wages Act.

14. Disciplinary action for misconduct.—(a) A fine may be imposed on any workman in respect of an act or omission on his part, in accordance with section 8 of the Payment of Wages Act, 1936.

(b) A workman may be suspended for a period not exceeding four days at a time, or dismissed without notice or any compensation in lieu of notice, if he is found to be guilty of misconduct.

(c) The following acts and omissions shall be treated as misconduct:—

(i) Wilful insubordination or disobedience, whether alone or in combination with others, to any lawful or reasonable order of a superior,

(ii) theft, fraud, or dishonesty in connection with the employer's business or property,

(iii) wilful damage to or loss of the employer's goods or property,

(iv) taking, giving, offering or asking for bribes or any illegal gratifications whatsoever,

(v) habitual absence without leave or absence without leave for more than ten days,

(vi) habitual late attendance,

(vii) habitual breach of any law applicable to the establishment,

(viii) riotous or disorderly behaviour during working hours at the establishment or any act subversive of discipline,

(x) frequent repetition of any act or omission for which a fine may be imposed,

(xi) striking work or inciting others to strike work in contravention of the provisions of any law or rule having the force of law,

(xii) engaging in trade within the mill premises without the permission of the management, (xiii) habitual breach of rules or instructions for the maintenance and running of any department or the maintenance of the cleanliness of any portion of the mill premises or mill compound,

(xiv) allowing an unauthorised person to operate his machine,

(xv) collection of moneys within the mill premises during working hours for purposes not sanctioned by the management,

(xvi) smoking on the factory or godown premises.

(d) Without prejudice to the foregoing, it shall always be optional to the management to impose a fine in accordance with the provisions of the Payment of Wages Act instead of dismissing.

(e) No order of dismissal shall be made unless the workman concerned is informed in writing of the alleged misconduct and is given an opportunity to explain the circumstances alleged against him. The approval of the manager of the establishment and, where there is no manager, of the employer, is required in every case of dismissal, and when circumstances appear to warrant it, the manager or the employer may, whether an appeal has or has not been preferred, institute independent enquiries before dealing with the charges against a workman.

(f) An order of suspension shall be in writing and may take effect immediately on delivery to the workman. Such order shall set out in detail the alleged misconduct and the workman shall be given an opportunity of explaining the circumstances alleged against him. If on an enquiry the order is confirmed, the workman shall be deemed to have been absent for the period of suspension and shall not be entitled to any remuneration for such period. If, however, the order is rescinded, the workman shall be deemed to have been on duty during the period of suspension and shall be entitled to the same wages as he would have received if he had not been suspended.

(g) In awarding punishment under this Standing Order, the manager shall take into account the gravity of the misconduct, the previous record, if any, of the workman and any other extenuating or aggravating circumstances that may exist. A copy of the order passed by the manager shall be supplied to the workman concerned.

15. Complaints and appeals.—(a) All complaints arising out of employment, including those relating to unfair treatment, or wrongful exaction or wrongful application of these rules, shall be submitted to the manager or any other person authorised in this behalf.

(b) The order of the manager or of the authorised person, upon such complaint, as also an order of imposition of fine, of suspension, or of dismissal shall be subject to a right of appeal by the workman to his employer. The managing agents shall be deemed to be employers within the meaning of these rules.

16. Certificate on termination of service.—Every workman shall be entitled to a service certificate at the time of his dismissal, discharge, or retirement from service.

17. Liability of Manager.—The manager of the establishment shall be held personally responsible for the proper and faithful observance of the Standing Orders and other Rules of Service.

18. Exhibition of Standing Orders.—A copy of these orders in English and in the principal languages of the workmen employed in the establishment shall be posted at the manager's office and on a notice board maintained at or near the main entrance to the establishment and shall be kept in a legible condition.

SECOND PART.

(b) The cadre of permanent posts shall be liable to periodical revision according to requirements.

2. Appointment as permanent workmen.—All appointments as permanent workmen, (a) in the Engineering section or, (b) on the clerical staff, either in the factory or in the office, or, (c) in the capacity of line sardars, shall be made on three months' probation; provided that a badli who has put in at least three months' approved service of a similar nature shall not be required to undergo a period of probation before being appointed as a permanent workman.

3. Transfer of ownership and change of managing agents.—In the event of transfer of ownership of the mill or of change of managing agents, the workman shall remain unaffected as regards continuity of service.

4. Registration for work as badlis.—(a) Any person may apply in writing or in person for work as a badli at the labour bureau.

(b) The application with full particulars shall be registered.

(c) All registered applicants shall be given a trade test where necessary.

(d) If approved, their names, when vacancies occur, will be included in the list of registered badlis.

5. Appointments of registered badlis.—(a) All workmen who act as substitutes for permanent workmen for more than a week shall be registered as badli workers and shall receive employment in strict rotation.

(b) A badli workman's name may be removed from the list of registered badlis for—

(i) any of the acts or omissions listed as misconduct in the Standing Orders,

(ii) failure to reach the standard of efficiency and conduct required by the job he does,

(iii) continued non-attendance or repeated absence when due for employment.

If so treated the workman shall be notified in writing.

(c) Temporary vacancies in the ranks of the sardar staff shall be filled by the department from an approved list of badli Sardars, appointments being made in strict rotation irrespective of the length of the period for which they are made.

(d) The first fourteen days of employment of a badli appointed in place of a permanent workman may be terminated without notice.

(e) One week's notice of the termination of employment or one week's wages in lieu of notice shall be given to any badli employed for more than fourteen days.

The work in each class shall be given in strict rotation in the order in which the names occur in the Badli Register. The order of rotation shall be shown clearly in an indicator, so that persons interested may see it.

(g) If a badli is absent when his turn comes for either class of employment, he will forfeit that turn and the absence will be noted in the Register.

(h) If a badli is working when his turn comes for "short" employment, he will forfeit that turn and the fact that he is working will be noted in the Register.

(i) If a badli is working on "short" employment, when his turn comes for "long" employment, he will be given "long" employment automatically and the remaining period of short work given to the next person on the list for "short" employment.

(j) If "short" employment is converted to "long" employment by reason of the permanent workman asking for extra leave for eight weeks or more, a week's notice will be given to the short term badli employed and the job then given to the next person on the list for "long" employment.

(k) If "short" employment is converted to "long" employment in the same way but the period of extra leave is less than eight weeks, the job for that period will be given to the next person on the list for short employment.

(l) If a badli is working on "long" employment and is absent for a short period, the job will be given for that period to the next person on the list for "short" employment.

(m) If a badli is working on "long" employment he will remain in that employment until the permanent workman returns or the job is declared vacant.

(n) Appointments, whether for "short" or "long" employment, shall, where necessary, be extended by the period of grace allowed under paragraph 9(c) of the Standing Orders.

(o) If a badli selected for a permanent vacancy is absent with the permission of the management, the vacancy will be kept open till his return as far as practicable.

6. Exhibition of rules of service.—A copy of these rules in English and in the principal languages of the workmen employed in the establishment shall be posted at the Manager's office and on a notice board maintained at or near the main entrance to the establishment and shall be kept in a legible condition.

6. Conditions and rates of subscription.—Every subscriber shall subscribe monthly to the fund 6¼ per cent. (i.e., one anna in the rupee) of his monthly emoluments rounded to the nearest anna:

Provided that the payment of the subscription shall be optional during leave and no subscription shall be recovered when the subscriber is on leave without pay.

7. Realisation of subscriptions.—The subscription due from each subscriber shall be realised by monthly deductions from his emoluments.

8. Contribution by the employer.—The employer shall make a monthly contribution to the account of each subscriber equal to the amount subscribed by the subscriber himself and such contribution shall be credited to the Fund not later than the fifteenth of the month in which the subscriber's subscription is deducted from his emoluments.

9. Interest.—Interest earned on the moneys of the Fund invested under rule 14 shall be credited to the accounts of the individual subscriber pro-rata, after deducing the expenses involved in the administration of the Fund.

10. Advances from the Fund and their repayment.—(1) A temporary advance may be granted to a subscriber from the amount standing to his credit in the Fund at the discretion of the Board, subject to the following conditions:—

(a) No advance may be granted unless the Board is satisfied that the applicant's pecuniary circumstances justify it and that the amount advanced will be expended to pay expenses incurred in connection with the prolonged illness of the subscriber or any person actually dependent on him.

(b) An advance shall not exceed the total monthly emoluments of the subscriber for the three months preceding the application for such advance, or half the amount at the credit of the subscriber in the Fund, whichever is less.

(c) A second or subsequent advance shall not be granted until at least six months have elapsed since the complete repayment of a previous advance together with interest.

(2) An advance shall be recovered from the subscriber in such number of equal monthly instalments as the Board may direct; but such number shall not be less than 12, nor more than 24. A subscriber may, at his option, make repayment in a smaller number of instalments than the number directed.

(3) Recovery shall be made in the manner provided by rule 7 for the realisation of subscriptions and shall commence on the first occasion after the advance is made, on which the subscriber receives not less than 75 per cent. of his normal monthly emoluments. Recovery shall not be made, except with the subscriber's consent, while he is on leave.

(4) After the principal of the advance has been fully repaid, interest shall be paid thereon at such rate as may be prescribed by the Board from time to time.

(5) Interest shall be recovered in one or two instalments in the month or months immediately following the repayment of the principal.

(6) Recoveries of advances and the interest thereon shall be credited as they are made, to the account of the subscriber in the Fund.

11. Payment towards Insurance Policies.—(1) Subject to the conditions hereinafter laid down—

(a) Payments towards a policy of life insurance may, at the option of a subscriber, be substituted in whole or part for subscriptions due to the Fund;

(b) the amount of subscription with interest standing at the credit of the subscriber in the Fund may be withdrawn to meet a payment towards a policy of life insurance:

Provided that no amount shall be withdrawn—

(i) before the details of the proposed policy have been submitted to the Board, or

(ii) to make any payment effected more than 12 months before the withdrawal, or

(iii) in excess of the amount required to meet a premium actually due for payment within 6 months of the date of withdrawal.

(2) The subscriber shall send to the Board within such time, as the Board may deem sufficient, receipts or certified copies thereof to satisfy the Board that the amount withdrawn has been so applied for the purposes specified in clause (a) or (b) of sub-rule (1).

(3) The Board shall not make any payment on behalf of the subscriber to the Insurance Companies nor take steps to keep a policy alive.

(4) If a policy lapses or is charged or encumbered, any amount withdrawn from the Fund in respect of the policy will be paid or repaid as the case may be by the subscriber to the Fund or in default the Board may direct recoveries by instalments from the emoluments of the subscriber to be credited to the subscriber's account in the Fund.

12. Circumstances in which accumulations are payable.—(1) If a subscriber dies or for any other reason ceases to be a subscriber, the amount standing to his credit in the Fund including interest up to that date shall become payable to him or his nominee subject to any deductions authorised under rule 13.

(2) No claim shall be entertainable against the Fund if made more than three years after the date on which the amount due becomes payable.

(3) Any amount due from the Fund shall cease to bear interest after three months from the date on which the amount becomes payable.

(4) Payments under sub-rule (1) to the employee or his nominees in the event of his death, shall be made within three months of the date on which they fall due. In the case of the death of an employee who has no subsisting nominations, it shall be competent for the Board to pay the amount due to the natural heir or heirs of the deceased employee provided the Board is satisfied as to the heirship of the claimant or claimants.

13. Deductions.—(1) Except as provided in sub-rule (2) no deductions shall be made from the amount standing to the credit of a subscriber when final payment is made to him or his nominees under rule 12.

(2) (a) If any subscriber resigns or leaves his employment at his own request, otherwise than by reason of superannuation on medical grounds, the Board may, by a majority of two-third members, direct that deductions according to scales specified below shall be made from the amount paid into the subscriber's account by the employer under rule 8 (including interest accrued to the employer's contribution):—

(ii) Subscribers of 3 but less than 6 years standing—50 per cent.

(iii) Subscribers of 6 but less than 9 years standing—25 per cent.

(iv) Subscribers of 9 or more years standing—Nil.

(b) If any subscriber is dismissed for misconduct the Board shall, at the request of the employer, direct that a deduction equal to the contribution made by the employer into the subscriber's account under rule 8 (including interest accrued thereon) shall be made.

Explanation.—The term "misconduct" shall be interpreted with reference to standing orders existing in the undertaking.

(3) Deductions made under sub-rule (2) shall be credited to the Fund's Reserve Account.

14. Investment.—The moneys of the Fund not immediately required for the purposes of the Fund and held in a Post Office Savings Bank account shall be invested by the Board in any securities for the time being authorised under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, and the rules made thereunder, in respect of the investment of moneys of a Provident Fund recognised under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. Such investment shall be made in the name of the Board and may, when the conditions of investment permit, be made payable or transferable to the order of any two members duly authorised by the Board in this behalf.

15. Reference of disputed cases to a referee.—The decision of the Board shall be final and binding upon the subscribers and the employer in all matters relating to the Fund and in the event of the Board being equally divided in its opinion on any dispute, the dispute shall be submitted for decision to a referee agreed upon by the Board.

The accompanying rules regulating the award of the above scholarships and the annexures containing the form of application, bond, etc., referred to in the rules, are published for general information:—

Rules regulating the West Bengal Government Scholarships for Royal Indian Navy Cadets.

Six scholarships of the value of £116 each will be awarded annually by the Government of West Bengal (hereinafter called the Government) to each of the three West Bengal candidates standing highest in the list of successful candidates in each of the first two open competitive Royal Indian Navy Examinations conducted by the Federal Public Service Commission each year and selected for training for entry into the commissioned ranks of the Royal Indian Navy in order to enable them to meet the expenses of their training in the United Kingdom. When more than two examinations are held in any year, the scholarships will be granted only to candidates qualifying at the first two examinations. If the number of West Bengal candidates qualifying in either of the first two examinations in a year be less than three, the remaining scholarship(s), or if no West Bengal candidate qualifies in the said two examinations, all the scholarships will be awarded to the candidates qualifying in the subsequent examination or examinations, as the case may be, held in that year.

2. The scholarships will be open to candidates who are natives of, or domiciled in, the Province of West Bengal, or have ordinarily resided for a continuous period of not less than five years immediately preceding the date of the examination.

3. Candidates who do not fulfil the conditions set forth in paragraph 2 above but who have come over to reside permanently in West Bengal, will also be entitled to the scholarships, provided they make a declaration declaring West Bengal to be their permanent place of domicile in the form indicated in Annexure III.

4. The scholarships will be granted only to those candidates whose parents or guardians are unable to pay the expenses of training without substantial assistance from Government. The value of a scholarship is liable to be reduced if the circumstances of a candidate do not justify its payment in full.

5. Applications for the scholarships must be sent to the Chief Secretary to the Government of West Bengal through the Collector of the district concerned or the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, as the case may be, in the form shown in Annexure I, immediately the results of the selection examinations are intimated to the candidates.

6. The award of the scholarships will be provisional and will not be confirmed if the applicants are awarded any other scholarship.

7. A person holding a scholarship under this scheme will not be permitted to hold any other scholarship provided wholly or partly from Government funds. He will also not be allowed to hold any other scholarship or stipend awarded by any other Government or Administration.

8. Every candidate who has been awarded a scholarship will be required before the award is confirmed, and before the scholarship is paid, to execute a Bond in the form shown in Annexure II binding himself and one surety jointly and severally to refund to the Government the amount of the scholarship in the event of the forfeiture of the scholarship (under section 11 below) or of his deciding not to follow a military career or of himself and his parent/guardian failing when called upon to do so to enter into a contract with the Government of India in which he binds himself to serve in the Royal Indian Navy for a period of five years from the date of his being commissioned.

9. The amount of the scholarship will be payable by deposit in a bank in England for appropriation as necessary by the official guardian for the expenses of the candidate during his period of training.

10. A person holding a scholarship must give a written undertaking that he will at once and without discussion of possible alternatives, devote himself exclusively to the course of training laid down for him, comply with whatever instructions are given and do whatever work they may involve.

11. Any person in receipt of a scholarship who neglects his studies or whose work, conduct and progress are reported to be not satisfactory at any time during the course of his training or who tries to work for any other profession concurrently will render himself liable to forfeiture of his scholarship and at the discretion of the Government to the refund of the whole amount of the scholarship already paid or any part thereof as the Government may decide.

12. In the event of any doubt arising regarding the interpretation of these rules the decision of the Government shall be final and the Government reserve to themselves the right of amending these rules as may be considered necessary.

MINISTRY WITHOUT PORTFOLIO.

Rules regarding Permit System introduced between Western Pakistan and India.

No. II(55)/48-Genl.—1. Permits will be necessary for all persons wishing to travel from Western Pakistan to the Indian Dominion by Land, Sea or Air.

2. Persons belonging to countries other than Western Pakistan who are in possession of valid passports do not require any permits.

3. Government officers who have frequently to travel between the two Dominions on duty may be given permanent passes countersigned by authorised officers. In case the Pakistan Government decide to introduce a permit system on the basis of reciprocity these passes may be countersigned by authorised officers of both the Dominions. The passes should bear photographs of the officers.

For the staff working on the Jodhpur Railway, the General Manager of the railway will be authorised to sign permanent passes on behalf of the Indian Dominion. Passes will be confined strictly to the officials crossing and re-crossing the Frontier on duty, and will contain photographs of officials concerned.

4. From the date the permit system is brought into force, any person not in possession of a valid permit will not be allowed to enter the Indian Dominion.

5. Permits will be in printed forms and will be signed and issued by the High Commissioner, or Deputy High Commissioner for India in Pakistan who are authorised to issue the permits. The forms are machine-numbered and are bound in books of 100 forms each. Officers at the Check-Post should learn to distinguish the proper form.

6. Notwithstanding anything in these rules a permit will not be necessary in the case of refugees from Western Punjab or N.W.F. P. who may be evacuated through the Indian Government Evacuation Organisation functioning in Western Punjab.

7. No permits will be necessary in the case of refugees who may be sent by Sea from Karachi to Bombay by the High Commissioner for India, Karachi. A list of such refugees will, however, be forwarded immediately by Air Mail by the High Commissioner to the Director of Evacuation, Bombay, and the refugees will be allowed to land in Bombay on the basis of this list on the authority of the Director of Evacuation, Bombay. Similar procedure will apply in case of ships sent to ports in Kathiawar from Karachi, but lists in these cases will have to be sent to Director of Evacuation, Kathiawar.

8. In regard to refugees sent by Special Refugee Trains from Hyderabad (Sind) to India, an Officer of the High Commissioner should accompany these trains, and on his authority the refugees will be allowed to enter the Indian Dominion without any permits. Such trains will be run through to the Indian Dominion for so long as the Jodhpur Railway is responsible for the running of trains in both the Dominions.

9. Permits will be necessary in the case of refugees who may have to travel by ordinary trains between Hyderabad (Sind) and the Indian Dominion. The High Commissioner for India in Karachi will arrange to post an Officer in Hyderabad for the issue of such permits. The validity of these permits should not exceed the period which is necessary for the train to reach the Indian Dominion. A slight margin may, however, be left for delay in transit.

10. Railways, Steamships and Air Transport Companies should not issue tickets to persons who are not in possession of valid permits.

11. A person wishing to obtain permits will state clearly the station he wishes to visit in the Indian Dominion, and his address in India, and the permit will be filled in accordingly. The Police will have the right to check up the permit holder at the address given by him in India.

(a) to prepare and carry out schemes sanctioned under Chapter V;

(b) to supply electricity to owners of controlled stations and to licensees whose stations are closed down under this Act;

(c) to supply electricity as soon as practicable to any other licensees or persons requiring such supply and whom the Board may be competent under this Act so to supply.

19. Powers of the Board to supply electricity.—(1) The Board may, subject to the provisions of this Act, supply electricity to any licensee or person requiring such supply in any area in which a scheme sanctioned under Chapter V is in force:

Provided that the Board shall not—

(a) supply electricity for any purpose directly to any licensee for use in any part of the area of supply of a bulk-licensee without the consent of the bulk-licensee, unless the licensee to be supplied has an absolute right of veto on any right of the bulk-licensee to supply electricity for such purpose in the said part of such area, or unless the bulk-licensee is unable or unwilling to supply electricity for such purpose in the said part of such area on reasonable terms and conditions and within a reasonable time; or

(b) supply electricity for any purpose to any person, not being a licensee, for use in any part of the area of supply of a licensee without the consent of the licensee, unless—

- (i) the actual effective capacity of the licensee's generating station computed in accordance with paragraph IX of the First Schedule at the time when such supply was required was less than twice the maximum demand asked for by any such person; or
- (ii) the maximum demand of the licensee, being a distributing licensee and taking a supply of energy in bulk is, at the time of the request, less than twice the maximum demand asked for by any such person; or
- (iii) the licensee is unable or unwilling to supply electricity for such purpose in the said part of such area on reasonable terms and conditions and within a reasonable time.

(2) After the Board has declared its intention to supply electricity for any purpose in any area, for which purpose and in which area it is under this section competent to supply electricity, no licensee shall, the provisions of his licence notwithstanding, at any time be entitled without the consent of the Board to supply electricity for that purpose in that area.

(3) For the purposes of sub-section (1) "absolute right of veto" means an unqualified right vested in a licensee by virtue of any law, licence or other instrument whereby a bulk-licensee is prevented from supplying electricity in any specified area without the consent of the licensee in whom the right of veto vests.

20. Power to Board to engage in certain undertakings.—(1) The Board may, in accordance with any regulations made in this behalf, manufacture, purchase, sell or let on hire on the execution of a hire-purchase agreement or otherwise, any electric machinery, control-gear, fittings, wires or apparatus for lighting, heating, cooling, or motive power or for any other purpose for which electricity can or may be used, or any industrial or agricultural machinery operated by electricity, and may install, connect, repair, maintain or remove such fittings, wires, apparatus, machinery or control-gear and in respect thereof demand and take such remuneration or rents and charges and make such terms and conditions as it deems fit.

(2) The Board may maintain shops and showrooms for the display, sale or hire of fittings, wires, apparatus and machinery as aforesaid, conduct displays, exhibitions and demonstrations thereof, and generally do all things, including advertising, incidental to the sale and hire of such fittings, wires, apparatus and machinery and to the promotion and encouragement of the use of electricity.

(3) The Board shall show separately in its accounts moneys received and expended by it in connection with any undertakings in which it engages under this section.

21. Powers of Board in relation to water-power.—The Board may, with the previous approval of the Provincial Government, take such measures as in the opinion of the Board are calculated to advance the development of water-power in the Province, and may organise and carry out power and hydrometric survey work and cause to be made such maps, plans, sections and estimates as are necessary for any of the said purposes:

Provided that where any such measures relate to a source of water-power already operated upon by a licensee under a licence, the Board shall give the licensee notice of such measure and an opportunity to be heard on any representations he may desire to make in that behalf and may consider such representation.

22. Power to Board to conduct investigations.—Subject so far as the provisions of this section relate to water-power to the previous approval of the Provincial Government, the Board may at its own expense conduct such investigations, experiments and trials as it thinks fit for the improvement of the methods of transmission, distribution and supply of electricity or of the utilisation of fuel, water-power or other means of generating electricity, and may establish and maintain laboratories for the testing and standardisation of electrical instruments and equipment.

23. Loans by Board to licensees.—(1) Subject to any regulations made in this behalf, the Board may grant loans or advances to any licensee for the purposes of his undertaking on such terms as the Board thinks proper.

24. Power to Board to contribute to certain associations.—The Board may, subject to any regulations made in this behalf,

(1) pay such subscriptions as it thinks fit to any association for the promotion of the common interests of persons engaged in the generation, distribution and supply of electricity and the members of which consist mainly of such persons;

25. Consulting engineers.—The Board may, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed, from time to time appoint qualified persons to be consulting engineers to the Board and pay them such remuneration as it thinks proper.

26. Board to have powers and obligations of licensee under Act IX of 1910.—Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Board shall, in respect of the whole Province, have all the powers and obligations of a licensee under the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 (IX of 1910), and this Act shall be deemed to be the licence of the Board for the purposes of that Act:

Provided that nothing in sections 3 to 11, sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 21 and sections 22, 23 and 27 of that Act or in Clauses 1 to XII of the Schedule to that Act relating to the duties and obligations of a licensee shall apply to the Board.

27. Other functions of the Board.—The Board shall have such further powers and duties as are provided in this Act.

CHAPTER V.

The Board's Works and Trading Procedure.

28. Preparation of schemes.—With a view to rationalising the production and supply of electricity in any area the Board may from time to time prepare a scheme, not inconsistent with this Act, for that area, in which provision may be made for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(a) the establishment of the Board's own generating stations;

(b) the designation of generating stations, whether existing stations or new stations, as controlled stations at which electricity shall be generated for the purposes of the Board;

(c) the interconnection, by means of main transmission lines to be constructed or acquired by the Board, of any generating stations with any others and with any systems of licensees;

(d) where a scheme relates to a specified area, the interconnection of the system of the Board in that area with the system of the Board in any other area with respect to which a scheme is in being or may subsequently be made;

(e) the construction or acquisition of such other main transmission lines as the scheme may require;

(f) the use by the Board of any transmission lines or main transmission lines of any licensee;

(g) such supplemental, incidental and consequential provisions as may appear necessary or expedient for any of the purposes aforesaid:

(i) designate as a controlled station any generating station belonging to a person other than a licensee;

(ii) authorise the use or acquisition of a transmission line or a main transmission line belonging to a person other than a licensee.

29. Publication and sanctioning of schemes.—(1) The Board shall cause every scheme prepared under section 28 to be published in the official Gazette and in such local newspapers as it may consider necessary, and shall give public notice of the date, not being less than two months after the date of the notice, by which licensees and other persons interested may make representations thereon and when publishing such a scheme the Board shall show estimates of the capital expenditure involved and of the initial and ultimate revenues anticipated from the sale of energy, meter rentals and other services.

(2) The Board, after considering any such representations and after making such inquiries, if any, as it thinks fit, may sanction the scheme either without modification or subject to such modifications as it thinks fit, and either generally or in respect of any part of the area specified in the published scheme, and shall publish the scheme as sanctioned by it; and where the scheme has been sanctioned in respect of part of the said area, it may subsequently be sanctioned in respect of other parts of that area:

Provided that no sanction shall be accorded by the Board to any scheme or part of a scheme estimated to result in a capital expenditure exceeding fifty lakhs of rupees without prior consultation with the Authority and until any recommendations which the Authority may, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, make upon such consultation have received due consideration by the Board:

Provided further that where the recommendations of the Authority in regard to any scheme are not accepted by the Board, the Board shall not sanction the scheme without the previous consent of the Provincial Government.

(3) In respect of any scheme to which the first proviso to sub-section (2) applies, the Board shall, within one month after being requested by the Authority so to do, supply the Authority with all such information incidental or supplementary to the scheme as may be specified in the request.

30. Matters to be considered by the Authority.—The Authority shall, before making any recommendations in respect of a scheme upon which it has been consulted under the first proviso to sub-section (2) of section 29, have particular regard to whether or not in its opinion—

(a) any river-works proposed by the Board will prejudice the prospects for the best ultimate development of the river or its tributaries for power-generation, consistent with the requirements of irrigation, navigation and flood-control, and for this purpose the Authority shall satisfy itself that an adequate study has been made of the optimum location of dams and other river works;

(b) the proposed scheme will prejudice the proper combination of hydro-electric and thermo-electric power necessary to secure the greatest possible economic output of electric power;

(c) the proposed main transmission lines will be reasonably suitable for regional requirements;

(d) the scheme provides reasonable allowances for expenditure on capital and revenue account;

(e) the estimates of prospective supplies of electricity and revenue therefrom contained in the scheme are reasonable.

31. Recommendations of the Authority.—Where the Authority has been consulted under the first proviso to sub-section (2) of section 29 in respect of a scheme, it shall forward its recommendations thereon to the Board, sending a copy thereof to the Provincial Government, within six months from the date of the receipt by it of the scheme:

Provided that if the Board fails to supply in due time any information requested under sub-section (3) of section 29, the period within which the Authority shall forward its recommendations shall be correspondingly increased.

32. Carrying out of schemes.—The Board shall carry out and give effect to a scheme as soon as reasonably practicable after it has been sanctioned and published.

33. Power to alter or extend schemes.—The Board may from time to time alter or extend a scheme by a supplementary scheme made and sanctioned in the manner hereinbefore provided:

Provided that any alterations or extensions of a scheme which are in the opinion of the Board and the Authority minor in character may be made without preparing a supplementary scheme.

34. Controlled stations.—Where a generating station situate within an area for which a scheme is in force has been designated in the scheme as a controlled station, the relations between the Board and the licensee owning the station shall, subject to any arrangements agreed under section 47, be regulated by the provisions of the First Schedule.

35. Supply by the Board to licensees owning generating stations.—The Board may at any time declare to a licensee owning a generating station, other than a controlled station, situate within an area for which a scheme is in force that it is ready to make a supply of electricity available to the licensee for the purposes of his undertaking, and thereupon, but without prejudice to the provisions of section 47, the provisions of the Second Schedule shall apply in respect of the relations between the Board and the said licensee.

36. Power to Board to close down generating stations.—The Board may at any time declare to a licensee owning a generating station situate within an area for which a scheme is in force that the station shall be permanently closed down, and thereupon but without prejudice to the provisions of section 47, where the station is a controlled station the provisions of Part III of the First Schedule, or in other cases the provisions of the Third Schedule, shall apply in respect of the relations between the Board and the said licensee with reference to the station to be closed down.

37. Purchase of generating stations or undertakings or main transmission lines by the Board.—(1) Where under the First or Third Schedule any generating station or undertaking is to be purchased by the Board, or where a sanctioned scheme provides for the purchase by the Board of a main transmission line belonging to any licensee,—

(a) the generating station or undertaking from such date of purchase as may be fixed under the appropriate schedule, or the main transmission line from such date of purchase as the Board shall, by notice in writing given not less than one month before the said date, intimate to the licensee, shall vest in the Board free, save as provided in sub-section (2), from any debt, mortgage, lien or other similar obligation of the licensee or attaching to the station or undertaking or line, as the case may be, and any such debt, mortgage, lien or obligation shall save as aforesaid attach to the purchase-money in substitution of the station or undertaking or line:

Provided that notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary the licensee shall pay and the mortgagee, chargee, lien-holder or obligee shall accept the whole or part of the purchase money as the case may be in full or part satisfaction of the debt according as the amount of the purchase money is more or less than the amount of his debt;

(b) without prejudice to the provisions of section 47, the Board shall pay, or tender payment of, the price to be determined in accordance with the Fourth Schedule as soon as the amount thereof has been determined, together with interest on such amount from the date of purchase to the date of payment or tender of payment as aforesaid at the rate of one per centum over the average of the Reserve Bank rates between the said dates;

(c) the receipt of the licensee shall, notwithstanding anything in any other law, be a full and sufficient discharge to the Board for the payment due in respect of the purchase.

(2) Where a generating station or undertaking or main transmission line purchased by the Board under this Act is in course of construction, extension or repair at the date of purchase, the rights and liabilities of the former owner thereof under any contract for such construction, extension or repair shall be deemed to have been transferred to the Board, except such rights or liabilities acquired or incurred after the date of receipt of the notice of purchase without the prior sanction of the Board.

(3) Notwithstanding anything contained elsewhere in this Act—

(i) where any generating station purchased by the Board under this Act contains any plant or apparatus which, while the station was in operation, were used jointly for the purposes of generation and transmission or distribution or wholly for the purposes of transmission or distribution, then unless otherwise agreed between the Board and the licensee, such plant or apparatus shall not be purchased by the Board but shall remain the property of the licensee.

(ii) Where under the provisions of section 28 a scheme provides for the purchase of any main transmission line belonging to any licensee the Board shall not exercise the powers of acquisition thereby afforded without the prior consent of the licensee, which consent shall not be unreasonably withheld.

38. Provision of new generating stations.—The Board shall itself establish a new generating station in any area in which it is required by any sanctioned scheme to be situated, but the Board may, with the sanction of the Provincial Government, make arrangements with any licensee or other person for the establishment of a new generating station required by a sanctioned scheme, if in the opinion of the Board it is desirable so to do.

39. Operation of Board's generating stations.—Where the Board itself establishes a new generating station or acquires a generating station otherwise than for the purpose of closing it down it shall operate the station itself, but the Board may, with the sanction of the Provincial Government, make arrangements with any licensee or other person for its operation, if in the opinion of the Board it is desirable so to do.

40. Provision regarding connections with main transmission lines purchased by the Board.—Where the Board has purchased a main transmission line and by reason of the user thereof by the Board any alteration or replacement of switchgear or other apparatus of any licensee connected with the line becomes necessary, the Board may in its discretion itself carry out such alteration or replacement at its own cost or defray the reasonable expenses incurred by the licensee in effecting such alteration or replacement; and any question whether such alteration or replacement is necessary or whether the expenses incurred in connection therewith are reasonable shall in default of agreement be determined as provided under section 76.

41. Use by Board of transmission lines.—(1) Where the Board considers it necessary to use for any of its purposes any transmission lines or main transmission lines of a licensee, the Board shall have power to use such lines to the extent to which the capacity thereof is or thereafter remains surplus to the requirements of the licensee for the transmission of electricity, on payment of charges calculated in accordance with the provisions of the Fifth Schedule.

(2) The Board may, by agreement with any licensee or other person, use any transmission line or main transmission line of that licensee or person for such time and upon such terms as may be agreed.

42. Powers to Board for placing wires, poles, etc.—Notwithstanding anything contained in sections 12 to 16 and 18 and 19 of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 (IX of 1910), but without prejudice to the requirements of section 17 of that Act where provision in such behalf is made in a sanctioned scheme, the Board shall have, for the placing of any wires, poles, wall brackets, stays, apparatus and appliances for the transmission and distribution of electricity, or for the transmission of telegraphic or telephonic communications necessary for the proper co-ordination of the works of the Board, all the powers which the telegraph authority possesses under Part III of the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885 (XIII of 1885), with regard to a telegraph established or maintained by the Government or to be so established or maintained:

Provided that where a sanctioned scheme does not make such provision as aforesaid, all the provisions of sections 12 to 19 of the first-mentioned Act shall apply to the works of the Board.

43. Power to Board to enter into arrangements for purchase or sale of electricity under certain conditions.—(1) The Board may enter into arrangements with any person producing electricity within the Province for the purchase by the Board, on such terms as may be agreed, of any surplus electricity which that person may be able to dispose of.

(2) Where a sanctioned scheme so provides, the Board may, on such terms as may be agreed upon, enter into arrangements with any Government or person for the purchase or sale of electricity to be generated or used outside the Province:

Provided that the Board may not enter into such arrangements with any such Government or person without the consent of the Provincial Government, or into arrangements with any such person without the consent of the Government of the Province within which the electricity is to be generated or used.

44. Restriction on establishment of new generating stations or major additions or replacement of plant in generating stations.—(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force or in any licence, but subject to the provisions of this Act, it shall not be lawful for a licensee, or any other person, not being the Central Government or any Corporation created by legislation enacted by the Central Legislature, except with the previous consent in writing of the Board, to establish or acquire a new generating station or to extend or replace any major unit of plant or works pertaining to the generation of electricity in a generating station:

Provided that such consent shall not, except in relation to a controlled station, be withheld unless within three months from the date of receipt of an application—

(a) for consent to the establishment or acquisition of a new generating station, the Board—

(i) gives to the applicant being a licensee an undertaking that it is competent to, and will, within twenty-four months from the said date, afford to him a supply of electricity sufficient for his requirements pursuant to his application; or

(ii) shows to the applicant that the electricity required by him pursuant to his application could be more economically obtained within a reasonable time from another appropriate source;

(b) for consent to the extension of any major unit of plant or works as aforesaid, the Board—

(i) gives to the applicant being a licensee an undertaking that within twenty-four months from the said date either the station to which the application pertains will become a controlled station in terms of section 34, or the Board will make a declaration to the applicant in terms of section 35 offering him a supply of electricity sufficient for his requirements pursuant to his application, or the Board will make a declaration to him in terms of section 36, or

(c) for consent to the replacement of any major unit of plant or works, the Board—

(i) gives to the applicant being a licensee an undertaking that within eighteen months from the said date either the station to which the application pertains will become a controlled station in terms of section 34 or the Board will make a declaration to him in terms of section 36; or

(ii) shows to the applicant that the electricity required by him pursuant to his application could be more economically obtained within a reasonable time from another appropriate source or by other appropriate means.

(2) There shall be stated in every application under this section such particulars as the Board may reasonably require of the station, plant or works, as the case may be, in respect of which it is made, and where consent is given thereto, in acting in pursuance of such consent, the applicant shall not, without the further consent of the Board, make any material variation in the particulars so stated.

(3) Any difference or dispute arising out of the provisions of this section shall be referred to the arbitration of the Authority.

45. Power to Board to enter upon and shut down generating stations in certain circumstances.—(1) If any licensee fails to close down his generating station pursuant to a declaration of the Board under section 36, or if any person establishes or acquires a new generating station or extends or replaces any plant or works in any generating station in contravention of section 44, the Board may authorise any of its officers to enter upon the premises of such station and shut down the station or the plant or works, as the case may be, in respect of which the failure or contravention has occurred.

(2) Any expenses incurred by the Board under this section shall be recoverable by it from the licensee or person concerned as an arrear of land revenue, and for such purpose the Board shall be deemed to be a public officer within the meaning of section 5 of the Revenue Recovery Act, 1890 (I of 1890).

(2) Without prejudice to the provisions of section 47, the Grid Tariff shall apply to sales of electricity by the Board to licensees where so required under any of the First, Second and Third Schedules, and shall, subject as hereinafter provided, also be applicable to sales of electricity by the Board to licensees in other cases:

Provided that if in any such other case it appears to the Board that, having regard to the extent of the supply required, the transmission expenses involved in affording the supply are higher than those allowed in fixing the Grid Tariff, the Board may make such additional charges as it considers appropriate.

(3) The Grid Tariff shall be so framed as to include as part of the charge, and show separately a fixed kilowatt charges component and a running charges component:

Provided that if in respect of any area the electricity to be sold by the Board is wholly or substantially derived from hydro-electric sources, the running charges component may be omitted.

(4) The fixed kilowatt charges component in the Grid Tariff may be framed so as to vary with the magnitude of maximum demand.

(5) Where only a portion of a licensee's maximum demand for the purposes of his undertaking is chargeable at the Grid Tariff, the price payable for that portion shall not be greater than the average price which would have been payable had the whole of the said maximum demand of the licensee been chargeable at the Grid Tariff.

(6) The Grid Tariff may contain provisions for—

(a) adjustment of price having regard to the power factor of supply taken or the cost of fuel or both;

(b) a minimum charge related to a past or prospective demand of a licensee on the Board.

(7) The Grid Tariff may contain such other terms and conditions, not inconsistent with this Act and the regulations, as the Board thinks fit.

47. Power to Board to make alternative arrangements with licensees.—Notwithstanding anything contained in sections 34 to 37 and sub-section (2) of section 46 but subject to any regulations made in this behalf, the Board may make such arrangements as may be mutually agreed with any licensee whose area of supply is situate within an area for which a scheme is in force, in regard to the purchase or sale of electricity and the price thereof, or the purchase, operation or control of any generating station or main transmission line:

Provided that in making any such arrangement the Board shall not show undue preference to any licensee.

48. Power to licensee to carry out arrangements under this Act.—Where under any provision of this Act the Board is authorised or required to enter into arrangements with any licensee for any purpose, then notwithstanding anything contained in any law or in any license, memorandum of association or other instrument regulating the constitution or powers of the licensee, it shall be lawful for the licensee to enter into and carry out any such arrangements.

49. Provision for the sale of electricity by the Board to persons other than licensees.—Subject to the provisions of this Act and of any regulations made in this behalf, the Board may supply electricity to any person not being a licensee upon such terms and conditions as the Board may from time to time fix having regard to the nature and geographical position of the supply and the purposes for which it is required:

Provided that in fixing any such terms and conditions the Board shall not show undue preference to any person.

50. Board not to supply electricity in certain circumstances.—Nothing contained in sections 34, 35 and 36 shall apply in any case where under section 19, it is not permissible for the Board to supply electricity directly to a licensee owning a generating station; and nothing in sections 46, 47 and 49 shall empower the Board to supply electricity directly to any licensee or person to whom it is not otherwise entitled so to supply electricity.

51. Provisional payments.—Where the price to be paid for electricity by or to the Board under this Act cannot be finally ascertained until after the end of a year of account, the amount to be paid shall be ascertained as soon as practicable thereafter, but the party from whom the payment is due shall make to the other monthly payments on account of the net amounts due in accordance with estimates made for the purpose, subject to adjustment as soon after the end of the year of account as the actual liability can be ascertained.

52. Lower limit of power factor in supply by Board.—Unless otherwise agreed between the Board and the licensee, no supply of electricity taken by a licensee from the Board under this Act shall be taken at an average power factor below 0·85 during the period of maximum demand of the licensee in any month, and in the event of the average power factor as aforesaid being lower than 0·85, the licensee shall within a reasonable time take such measures, the cost of which shall not be borne by the Board, as may be necessary to raise it to a value not lower than 0·85.

53. Provision of accommodation and right of way.—(1) Where the Board for the purposes of any arrangements which it has made with any licensee under this Act requires accommodation on, in, under or over the premises of the licensee for any works or apparatus to be provided by the Board, the licensee shall, if suitable and sufficient accommodation exists, grant such accommodation free of cost to the Board, or if such accommodation does not exist, it shall be provided upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed between the Board and the licensee.

(2) The Board and any licensee shall each have a right of access at all times to his own property on, in, over and under the property of the other.

54. Power to Board to connect meters, etc., to apparatus of licensees.—The Board shall have power to connect with the apparatus of any licensee any such correct meters, switch-gear and other equipment as may be necessary to enable it to carry out the provisions of this Act, and such meters, switch-gear and other equipment shall, unless otherwise agreed, be provided and maintained by the Board at its own cost.

55. Licensees to comply with Board's directions.—Every licensee shall comply with such directions as the Board may from time to time give him for the purpose of achieving the maximum of economy and efficiency in the operation of the station.

56. Leases of generating stations.—No licensee shall, except with the previous approval in writing of the Board and subject to any conditions which the Board may think fit to impose, enter into any arrangement whereby any generating station is to be let or held on lease by him, and any such arrangement entered into in contravention of this sub-section shall be void and of no effect.

57. Licensees' charges to consumers.—(1) The provisions of the Sixth Schedule and the Table appended to the Seventh Schedule shall be deemed to be incorporated in the licence of every licensee, not being a local authority, from the date of the commencement of the licensee's next succeeding year of account, and from such date the licensee shall comply therewith accordingly and any provisions of such licence or of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 (IX of 1910), or any other law, agreement or instrument applicable to the licensee shall, in relation to the licensee, be void and of no effect in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this section and the said Schedule and Table.

(2) Where the provisions of the Sixth Schedule and the Table appended to the Seventh Schedule are under sub-section (1) deemed to be incorporated in the licence of any licensee, the following provisions shall have effect in relation to the said licensee, namely:—

(a) The Board, or where no Board is constituted under this Act the Provincial Government, may, if it is satisfied that the licensee has failed to comply with any provision of the Sixth Schedule, and shall when requested so to do by the licensee, constitute a rating committee to examine the licensee's charges for the supply of electricity and to recommend thereon to the Provincial Government:

Provided that no rating committee shall be constituted in respect of a licensee within three years from the date on which such a committee has reported in respect of that licensee, unless the Provincial Government declares that in its opinion circumstances have arisen rendering the orders passed on the recommendations of the previous rating committee unfair to the licensee or any of his consumers.

(b) The rating committee shall, after giving the licensee a reasonable opportunity of being heard and after taking into consideration the efficiency of operation and management and the potentialities of his undertaking, report to the Provincial Government making recommendations (and giving reasons therefor) regarding the charges for electricity which the licensee may make to any class or classes of consumers so however that the recommendations are not likely to prevent the licensee from earning clear profits sufficient when taken with the sums available in the Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve to afford him a reasonable return during his next succeeding three years of account if the potentialities of the undertaking of the licensee, with efficient operation and management, so permit.

(c) Within one month after the receipt of the report under clause (b) the Provincial Government shall cause the report to be published in the official Gazette, and may at the same time make an order in accordance therewith fixing the licensee's charges for the supply of electricity with effect from such date, not earlier than two months or later than three months after the date of publication of the report, as may be specified in the order: and the licensee shall forthwith give effect to such order:

Provided that nothing in this clause shall be deemed to prevent a licensee from reducing at any time any charges so fixed.

(3) Where a Board is constituted under this Act, the rating committee shall consist of three members, two of whom shall be members of the Board and one shall be a representative, co-opted by the two members of the Board from a licensees' association of which the licensee concerned is or is eligible to be a member or, if there is no such association, from such Chamber of Commerce or similar body as the Board may direct; one of such members of the Board shall be experienced in accounting and financial matters and one of the members of the Board shall be the Chairman of the committee.

(4) Where no Board is constituted under this Act, the rating committee shall consist of five members of whom the Chairman and two other members shall be nominated by the Provincial Government, one member shall be nominated by the licensee and one member shall be nominated by the local Electric Licensees' Association, or if there is no such association, by such Chamber of Commerce or similar body as the Provincial Government may direct.

(d) to supply to the Board all the electricity generated at the station.

(2) To enable a licensee to comply with any direction under sub-paragraph (1) requiring extension of the station or any part thereof for purposes of the Board, the Board may, if it considers it expedient and practicable so to do, offer to advance to him a loan upon such terms and conditons as it may deem proper and the licensee shall accept the loan from the Board on the terms and conditions offered, unless he raises a loan from other sources or employs his own funds for purposes of such extension on terms similar to the terms offered by the Board:

Provided that notwithstanding anything contained in any law or in any mortgage, charge or instrument executed by the licensee, the loan so advanced by the Board and the interest thereon shall be a first charge on the extension and subject to any prior encumbrance shall also be charged on the undertaking and all the revenues of the licensee and no such loan shall be amortised in any way by the licensee:

Provided further that if at the date of purchase of the station under this Act or of the licensee's undertaking under the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 (IX of 1910), the said principal or any part thereof remains unpaid though due for redemption or is not on that date due for redemption, then any sum payable by the purchaser as a percentage on account of compulsory purchase under this Act or the said Act shall be reduced by an amount which bears the same proportion to that sum as the amount of the said principal or part thereof remaining unpaid or not being due for redemption as aforesaid bears to the total of the ordinary, preference and debenture capital of the licensee and the loans advanced by the Board under this sub-paragraph.

Explanation.—In this sub-paragraph, the expressions "ordinary capital", "preference capital" and "debenture capital" have the meanings respectively assigned to them in the Sixth Schedule.

II. From the date of control the Board shall, except where prevented by causes beyond its control, be under obligation to supply to the licensee, and the licensee shall be under obligation to take from the Board, the whole of the electricity required by the licensee for the purposes of his undertaking, except such quantity of electricity as the licensee may for the time being be entitled under paragraph III to purchase from a source other than the Board or as he may be generating in another station, not being a controlled station.

III. Unless otherwise agreed between the Board and the licensee, the licensee shall not, where he has received a notice under paragraph I, purchase after the date of control any quantity of electricity from a source other than the Board:

Provided that where on the date of the receipt of such notice the licensee is bound under any contract to purchase any quantity of electricity from some other source, he may, for a period not exceeding two years after the date of control or for such further period, if any, as the Board may allow, continue to purchase electricity under the said contract from such other source.

IV. The Board shall pay to the licensee, whether or not any electricity is generated at the station, the costs ascertained in accordance with the provisions of the Eighth Schedule.

V. The price to be paid by the licensee for electricity supplied by the Board shall be determined in the manner provided in the appropriate Part of this Schedule.

VI. The points at which electricity to be supplied under this Schedule shall be delivered by the Board and the licensee respectively shall, unless otherwise agreed between the Board and the licensee, be at the generating station, and the pressure of the supplies shall be such as the Board and the licensee may agree.

VII. Where any licensee owns more than one controlled station—

(a) such of the several controlled stations as are interconnected shall, for the purposes of this Schedule, be deemed to comprise a single controlled station, and, unless the subject or context otherwise requires, the provisions of this Schedule shall be construed as if the word "combined" had been inserted before the word "station" or the words "generating station" wherever they occur;

(b) the electricity supplied at the several controlled stations by the licensee to the Board, or by the Board to the licensee, shall each respectively be treated as single supplies;

(c) in the application of clause (a) of paragraph XII, the costs of production at each of the several controlled stations shall be separately ascertained, and in the application of clause (c) of the said paragraph—

(i) the sums ascertained in accordance with clause (a) of paragraph 1 of the Eight Schedule in respect of each of the several controlled stations shall be separately allocated between fixed costs and running costs, and

(ii) the sum of the several fixed costs and the sum of the several running costs shall be the fixed costs and the running costs respectively of the combined station;

(d) in directing the operation of the combined station under clause (b) of sub-paragraph (1) of paragraph I, the Board shall have regard to the nature and capacity of the licensee's transmission system interconnecting the several controlled stations and to the requirements of the licensee at each of those stations.

VIII. In the event of the licensee failing, except where prevented by causes beyond his control, to perform or continue to perform any obligation imposed upon him under this Part, the Board may give notice to him in writing that on the first day of the licensee's next succeeding year of account the generating station will be purchased by the Board, and on such day the Board shall purchase the station at a price determined in accordance with the Fourth Schedule; and thereafter—

(a) all the provisions of this Schedule except paragraph II and this paragraph shall, in relation to the licensee, cease to have effect;

(b) the Board shall supply the licensee with the electricity required by him under paragraph II at such price and on such conditions as the Board may determine.

PART II.

Price to be paid for electricity supplied by the Board under Part I.

IX. There shall be agreed between the Board and the licensee in respect of each month of the licensee's year of account—

(a) the maximum capacity of the station, that is to say, the maximum capacity (expressed in kilowatts available for supply to feeders) of such plant and works appertaining to the generation of electricity at the station as were available for reliable and regular commercial operation on the first day of the month, including the capacity of such plant and works as were temporarily out of commission;

(b) the number and size of units of plant and works, forming part of the aforesaid plant and works, which ought properly to be deemed to be standby if the station were not a controlled station;

(c) the standby capacity of the station, that is to say, the number of kilowatts (expressed in kilowatts available for supply to feeders) by which the maximum capacity of the station would be reduced if the standby plant and works referred to in clause (b) were to be left out of account;

(d) the actual effective capacity of the station, that is to say, the number of kilowatts by which the maximum capacity exceeds the standby capacity.

X. (1) The licensee shall be entitled to purchase from the station in each month at a price determined under paragraph XIII a number of kilowatts not exceeding the scheduled effective capacity of the station on the first day of that month as determined in sub-paragraph (2).

(2) The scheduled effective capacity of the station shall be agreed between the Board and the licensee in respect of each month of the year of account, and shall be computed in the same manner as the actual effective capacity under paragraph IX, except that there shall be left out of account such units of plant and works, if any, forming part of the plant and works referred to in clause (a) of the said paragraph, as the licensee declares to be surplus to his requirements for the time being:

Provided that the licensee shall not declare to be surplus to his requirements any such units of plant or works as were installed or were on order at the date of control or which were included in any previous computation of the scheduled effective capacity:

Provided further that if as a result of the licensee declaring as surplus to his requirements any units of plant or works, the scheduled effective capacity is in respect of any month computed to be less than the maximum demand of the licensee on the station for the purposes of his own undertaking, then such units of plant or works and all further additional units of plant or works shall thereafter always be deemed to be surplus to the requirements of the licensee as aforesaid unless the Board decides otherwise.

XI. Of the kilowatt-hours purchased by the licensee from the Board in each month, a number of kilowatt-hours not exceeding the number which bears the same proportion to the total number purchased as the scheduled effective capacity for the month bears to the maximum demand of the licensee on the Board in that month shall be purchased at a price determined under paragraph XIII; the balance being purchased at a price determined under paragraph XIV:

Provided that if the station is a hydro-electric station or if any unit of a combined station is a hydro-electric unit, the number of kilowatt-hours which the licensee shall be entitled to purchase as aforesaid shall be reduced by such amount, if any, as may be agreed between the Board and the licensee, having regard to the number of kilowatt-hours actually supplied in the month from such hydro-electric station or unit.

XII. As soon as practicable after the end of a year of account—

(a) there shall be ascertained in respect of that year the cost of production at the station in accordance with the provisions of the Eighth Schedule;

(b) there shall be deducted from the total sum ascertained in respect of that year under clauses (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f) of paragraph I of the Eighth Schedule, such proportion of the charges referred to in the said clauses as are wholly attributable to so much of the plant and works, if any, as has been declared by the licensee under sub-paragraph (2) of paragraph X to be surplus to his requirements, and the balance remaining after such deduction shall for the purposes of this Schedule be referred to as the scheduled overhead charges:

Provided that in assessing the said proportion regard shall be had to the period during which any such plant or works were declared to be surplus as aforesaid;

(c) there shall be allocated between fixed costs and running costs in accordance with the provisions of the Ninth Schedule the sum ascertained in respect of that year under clause (a) of paragraph I of the Eighth Schedule, and the amount of running costs divided by the number of kilowatt-hours supplied from the station in that year shall for the purposes of this Schedule be referred to as the running charges component;

(d) there shall be ascertained in respect of that year an amount (in this Schedule referred to as the scheduled fixed works costs) calculated from the expression, “$\frac{A}{2} + \frac{A}{2} \times \frac{B}{C}$” where—

A = the amount of fixed costs ascertained in respect of that year under clause (c);

B = the sum of the scheduled effective capacities for each month of that year;

C = the sum of the actual effective capacities for each month of that year.

XIII. The licensee shall pay to the Board in respect of each month of the year of account for the electricity purchased under paragraphs X and XI—

(a) in respect of kilowatts, an amount equal to one-twelfth of the sum of the scheduled overhead charges and the scheduled fixed works costs;

(b) in respect of kilowatt-hours a sum found by multiplying the number of kilowatt-hours supplied by the running charges component:

Provided that if in any year of account the station for any reason ceases to generate electricity for one thousand hours or more, then for the purposes of ascertaining the running charges component and the scheduled fixed works costs under clauses (c) and (d) respectively of paragraph XII—

(i) the said clause (c) shall be construed as if there were substituted for the words “that year” in both places where they occur, the words “the most recent year of account in which the station did not cease to generate electricity for one thousand hours or more” and as if to the said clause the following proviso were added, namely:—

“Provided that so much of the said sum as is represented by the cost of fuel shall be adjusted to take account of the cost which would have been incurred had that fuel been consumed at the average prices prevailing in the actual year of account”;

(ii) in evaluating the expression contained in the said clause (d), the letter C shall be deemed to be equal to the sum of the actual effective capacities for each month of the most recent year of account in which the station did not cease to generate electricity for one thousand hours or more:

Provided further that if in any year of account there exist in the station any units of plant or works which have been declared by the licensee under sub-paragraph (2) of paragraph X to be surplus to his requirements in that year, there shall be added to the running charges component in respect of that year the amount, if any, by which that part of the said component attributable to the cost of fuel is less than ninety per centum of the corresponding part of the running charges component in respect of the year of account immediately preceding that in which the earliest installed of the said units of plant or works first came into commercial operation in the station, and in ascertaining the corresponding part as aforesaid, the fuel consumed shall be deemed to be of the same average quality and to be consumed at the same average cost per ton as the fuel consumed in the year of account:

Provided further that if in respect of any month of the year of account any units of plant or works previously declared by the licensee as aforesaid to be surplus to his requirements are for the first time taken into account in assessing the scheduled effective capacity for that month, then in addition to the payment referred to in clause (a) the licensee shall pay to the Board a sum equal to any sums previously paid by the Board to the licensee on revenue account (in respect of any period prior to the date on which the said units of plant or works came into commission) by way of interest, depreciation, testing and tuning-up expenses attributable to the said units of plant or works; and the sum to be paid as aforesaid shall become due in one or more instalments and at such time or times as the Board may direct.

XIV. The price payable by the licensee to the Board for all electricity supplied by the Board to him in excess of the quantities referred to in paragraphs X and XI shall be the Grid Tariff.

XV. The licensee shall have the right at any time, on giving to the Board prior notice in writing expiring at the end of any year of account, to purchase from the Board at the Grid Tariff the whole of the electricity supplied to him by the Board thereafter:

Provided that the Board in those circumstances may make it a condition that the licensee shall, until the date on which the scheduled effective capacity of the station becomes nil, pay to the Board in respect of each month in addition to the Grid Tariff one-twelfth of such proportion as the Board may fix of the annual charges by way of interest and depreciation which would have been payable to the Board in respect of the year of account had the said notice not been given;

Provided further that in assessing the scheduled effective capacity for the purposes of the first proviso all units of plant or works which may have been under this Schedule declared or deemed to be surplus to the requirements of the licensee at the date of the expiration of the said notice and all additional units or plant or works shall after that date always be deemed to be surplus to the requirements of the licensee:

Provided further that after the expiration of the said notice the licensee shall not be entitled any time to purchase electricity from the Board at the price ascertained under paragraph XIII.

PART III.

Permanent closing down of a controlled station.

XVI. The Board may give the licensee not less than six months' notice in writing expiring at the end of any year of account that from the first day of the next succeeding year of account it will not again direct the licensee to generate any electricity in the station, and upon that date (hereinafter in this Schedule referred to as the date of closing down) the station shall be permanently closed down.

XVII. From the date of closing down paragraphs I, IV and VIII shall, in relation to the station, cease to have effect, and on receipt of the notice under paragraph XVI the licensee shall have the option (to be exercised by a date not later than three months prior to the date of closing down) either—

(a) (i) to sell the station at any time after the date of closing down, and

(ii) to purchase the electricity supplied to him by the Board at the Grid Tariff, or

(b) (i) to require the Board to purchase the station or at the option of the licensee the undertaking of the licensee at the date of closing down at a price determined under the Fourth Schedule, and

(ii) to purchase the electricity supplied to him by the Board in accordance with the provisions of Part II as modified by paragraph XVIII:

Provided that where the station cannot be severed from the distributing system of the licensee or where the severance of the station from the distributing system of the licensee is likely to affect prejudicially the interests of the licensee, the licensee shall be entitled to demand that the Board shall purchase his entire undertaking and on such demand being made the Board shall purchase the entire undertaking of the licensee.

Any question arising under the proviso to this paragraph shall be referred to arbitration under section 76.

XVIII. Where a licensee exercises his option under paragraph XVII in terms of clause (b) thereof, the Board shall comply with the requirement to purchase the station under sub-clause (i) of that clause, and in applying the provisions of Part II to the purchase by the licensee of electricity supplied to him by the Board,—

(a) the station shall, notwithstanding that it has been permanently closed down, be deemed to remain a controlled station in operation but to be such a station which has ceased to generate electricity for one thousand hours or more during each year of account;

(b) clause (a) of paragraph IX shall be construed as if the following were substituted therefor, namely:—

"(a) the maximum capacity of the station, that is to say, the maximum capacity (expressed in kilowatts available for supply to feeders) of such plant and works appertaining to the generation of electricity at the date of closing down as would have been available for reliable and regular commercial operation on the first day of each month, had the station not been closed down under Part III and had no replacement of any major item of such plant or works been carried out;"

(c) clause (a) of paragraph XII shall be construed as if the following were substituted therefor, namely:—

"(a) there shall be ascertained in respect of the year of account such annual charges by way of interest and depreciation attributable to the assets purchased by the Board under Part III as would have resulted from the application of clauses (e) and (f) of paragraph I of the Eighth Schedule had those assets remained in the ownership of the licensee;"

(d) clause (b) of paragraph XII shall be construed as if the reference therein to clauses (b), (c) and (d) of paragraph I of the Eighth Schedule were omitted;

(e) there shall be added to the sum payable by the licensee to the Board under clause (a) of paragraph XIII in each month of the year of account a sum equal to one-twelfth of the amount calculated from the expression, "$\frac{A \times B}{C}$" where—

A = that part of the scheduled overhead charges payable by the licensee to the Board in respect of the most recent year of account during which the station did not cease to generate electricity for one thousand hours or more, which relates to the items referred to in clauses (b), (c) and (d) of paragraph I of the Eighth Schedule;

C = the sum of the scheduled effective capacities for each month of the most recent year of account as aforesaid.

PART IV.

Purchase by Board of controlled station not to be closed down.

XIX. Where in respect of any month notified by the Board (and hereinafter in this Schedule referred to as the relevant month), the scheduled effective capacity of the station is computed under paragraph X to be less than one-half of the actual effective capacity of the station, the Board may give to the licensee six months' notice in writing that on the first day of the year of account next following the date of expiration of such notice the station will be purchased by the Board.

XX. Notwithstanding anything contained in paragraph X, in computing the Scheduled effective capacity for purposes of paragraph XIX there shall be left out of account all such units of plant and works as would not reasonably have been required by the licensee for purposes other than supply to the Board had the station not been a controlled station.

XXI. Where a notice under paragraph XIX has been served by the Board on the licensee, the Board shall purchase the station or where a severance of the station from the distributing system of the licensee is not possible or is likely to affect prejudicially the interest of the licensee and the licensee so requires the entire undertaking of the licensee at the date specified in the notice and at a price determined under the Fourth Schedule.

XXII. From the date of purchase of the station or at the option of the licensee the undertaking of the licensee under paragraph XXI the provisions of paragraphs I, IV and VIII shall, in relation to the station, cease to have effect, and the licensee shall be required to purchase the electricity supplied to him by the Board in accordance with the provisions of Part II as modified by paragraph XXIII.

XXIII. In applying the provisions of Part II to the purchase by a licensee whose station has been purchased under this Part of electricity supplied to him by the Board,—

(a) the station shall notwithstanding that it has been purchased by the Board, be deemed to remain a controlled station;

(b) clause (a) of paragraph XII shall be construed as if the reference therein to the provisions of the Eighth Schedule excluded a reference to clauses (b), (c) and (d) of paragraph I of that Schedule, and as if the following proviso were added to the said clause (a), namely:—

"Provided that the annual charges to be included in accordance with clauses (e) and (f) of paragraph I of the said Schedule shall be such as would have resulted had the assets purchased by the Board under Part IV remained in the ownership of the licensee";

(c) clause (b) of paragraph XII shall be construed as if the reference therein to clauses (b), (c) and (d) of paragraph I of the Eighth Schedule were omitted;

(d) there shall be added to the sum payable by the licensee to the Board under clause (a) of paragraph XIII in each month of the year of account a sum equal to one-twelfth of the amount calculated from the expression, "$\frac{A \times B}{C}$" where—

A = that part of the scheduled overhead charges payable by the licensee to the Board in respect of the last year of account in which the station was in the ownership of the licensee, which relates to the items referred to in clauses (b), (c) and (d) of paragraph I of the Eighth Schedule;

B the sum of the scheduled effective capacities for each month of the year of account;

C = the sum of the scheduled effective capacities for each month of the said last year of account.

THE SECOND SCHEDULE.

(See section 35.)

Supply by Board to licensees owning stations other than controlled stations.

I. Before the end of each year the Board shall declare to the licensee in respect of each of the two next succeeding years the maximum number of kilowatts which it will make available for the purpose of the licensee's undertaking.

II. Where the Board and the licensee agree that the number of kilowatts declared under paragraph I will be inadequate to meet the requirements of the licensee having regard to the capacity of the licensee's generating plant, the Board shall not refuse its consent under section 44, the provisions of that section notwithstanding, to the installation by the licensee of such generating plant as he may reasonably require for the purposes of his undertaking, unless the Board is able appropriately to amend its declaration within a reasonable time.

III. The licensee shall be entitled to demand from the Board, and the Board shall, except where prevented by causes beyond its control, be under obligation to supply to the licensee, a maximum number of kilowatts in each year not exceeding, without the consent of the Board, the maximum number of kilowatts declared under this Schedule in respect of that year.

IV. The point at which the electricity to be supplied under this schedule shall be delivered to the licensee shall, unless otherwise agreed between the Board and the licensee, be at the licensee's generating station, and the pressure of supply shall be such as may be agreed between the Board and the licensee.

V. The Board shall bear the whole of the cost of the service apparatus required for making the supply under this schedule available to the licensee.

VI. The price to be paid by the licensee to the Board in respect of each year for electricity supplied under this Schedule shall be the Grid Tariff.

THE THIRD SCHEDULE.

Closing down of generating stations other than controlled stations.

I. Where the Board proposes under section 36 permanently to close down a generating station other than a controlled station, it shall give the licensee owning the station not less than six months' notice in writing expiring at the end of any year of account that from the first day of the next succeeding year of account (hereafter in this Schedule referred to as the date of closing down) the station shall be permanently closed down.

II. From the date of closing down the Board shall be under obligation to supply to the licensee, except where prevented by causes beyond its control, and the licensee shall be under obligation to take from the Board, the whole of the electricity required by the licensee for the purposes of his undertaking, except such quantity of electricity as the licensee may for the time being be entitled under paragraph III to purchase from a source other than the Board or as he may be generating in another station, not being a controlled station.

III. Unless otherwise agreed between the Board and the licensee, the licensee shall not, where he has received a notice under paragraph I, purchase after the date of closing down any quantity of electricity from a source other than the Board:

Provided that where on the date of the receipt of such notice the licensee is bound under any contract to purchase any quantity of electricity from some other source, he may, for a period not exceeding two years after the date of closing down or for such further period, if any, as the Board may allow, continue to purchase electricity under the said contract from such other source.

IV. (1) The point at which electricity to be supplied by the Board shall be delivered to the licensee shall, unless otherwise agreed between the Board and the licensee, be at the licensee's generating station, and the pressure of supply shall be such as may be agreed between the Board and the licensee.

(2) The Board shall bear the whole of the cost of the service apparatus required for making the supply available to the licensee.

V. The licensee, shall have the option, to be exercised by a date not later than three months prior to the date of closing down, either—

(a) (i) to sell the station at any time after the date of closing down, and

(ii) to purchase the whole of the electricity supplied to him by the Board at the Grid Tariff, or

(b) (i) to require the Board to purchase the station at the date of closing down at a price determined under the Fourth Schedule, and

(ii) to purchase the whole of the electricity supplied to him by the Board on the terms hereafter set out in this Schedule.

VI. Where a licensee exercises his option under paragraph V in terms of clause (b) thereof, the Board shall comply with the requirement to purchase under sub-clause (i) of that clause, and the following provisions of this Schedule shall apply.

VII. As soon as practicable after the licensee has exercised his option as aforesaid, there shall be ascertained and agreed between him and the Board the following quantities in respect of each year of account subsequent to the date of closing down, namely:—

(a) The maximum capacity of the station, that is to say, the maximum capacity (expressed in kilowatts available for supply to feeders) of such plant and works appertaining to the generation of electricity at the date of closing down as would have been available for reliable and regular commercial operation on the first day of the year of account, had the station not been closed down under this Schedule and had no replacement of any major item of such plant or works been carried out subsequent to the date of closing down.

(b) The number and size of units of plant and works, forming part of the aforesaid plant and works, which would have represented reasonable standby in the station.

(c) The standby capacity of the station, that is to say, the number of kilowatts (expressed in kilowatts available for supply to feeders) by which the maximum capacity of the station would be reduced if the standby plant and works referred to in clause (b) were to be left out of account.

(d) The agreed effective capacity of the station, that is to say, the number of kilowatts by which the maximum capacity exceeds the standby capacity.

VIII. As soon as practicable after the date of closing down there shall be ascertained in agreement between the Board and the licensee in respect of each of the three consecutive years of account immediately preceding the date of closing down (hereafter in this Schedule referred to as the basic years)—

(a) the sums expended by the licensee and wholly attributable to the generation of electricity under the following heads, namely:—

(i) fuel;

(ii) oil, water and stores consumed;

(iii) salaries and wages and any contribution by the licensee for pensions, provident fund, superannuation and insurance of officers and servants;

(iv) repairs and maintenance, and renewals not chargeable to capital account,

(v) management, rents, rates and taxes (including super-tax payable by the licensee as a company, but excluding other taxes on profits), insurance of plant and general establishment charges;

(vi) any other expense on revenue account;

(b) the actual effective capacity of the station on the first day of each such year agreed in accordance with the principles set out in paragraph IX of the First Schedule.

IX. As soon as practicable after the beginning of each year of account there shall be ascertained in respect of that year such annual charges by way of interest and depreciation attributable to the assets purchased by the Board under this Schedule as would have resulted from the application of clauses (e) and (f) of paragraph I of the Eighth Schedule, had those assets remained in the ownership of the licensee.

X. The licensee shall be entitled to purchase from the Board in each year of account at a price determined under paragraph XI—

(a) a number of kilowatts not exceeding the agreed effective capacity ascertained in respect of that year under paragraph VII, and

(b) a number of kilowatt-hours not exceeding the number of kilowatt-hours which bears the same proportion to the total number of kilowatt-hours required by the licensee in that year for the purposes of his undertaking as the agreed effective capacity ascertained in respect of that year bears to the total maximum demand of the licensee in that year for the said purposes.

XI. The price payable by the licensee in respect of each year of account for the quantity of electricity specified in paragraph X shall be—

(a) in respect of kilowatts, a fixed charge equal to the sum of—

(i) an amount calculated from the expression

$$“\frac{A}{2}+\frac{A}{2}\times\frac{B}{C}”$$

(ii) an amount calculated from the expression

$$“\frac{B\times D}{C}”$$

(iii) the annual charges by way of interest and depreciation ascertained in respect of the year of account under paragraph IX, where—

A = one-third of the total costs during the basic years under heads (ii), (iii), (iv) and (vi) set out in clause (a) of paragraph VIII;

B = the agreed effective capacity for the year of account;

C = one-third of the sum of the actual effective capacities [ascertained under clause (b) of paragraph VIII] for each of the basic years;

D = one-third of the total costs during the basic years under head (v) set out in clause (a) of paragraph VIII;

(b) in respect of kilowatt-hours, a running charge per kilowatt-hour ascertained—

(i) by multiplying the total number of tons of fuel consumed in the station in the basic years by the estimate agreed between the Board and the licensee of the cost per ton which would have been incurred in delivering and handling the same quantity of fuel of equivalent calorific value to the furnaces in the station during the year of account, had the station remained in the ownership of the licensee, and

(ii) by dividing the total cost so found by the total number of units sent out from the station in the basic years.

XII. The price payable by the licensee for all electricity supplied to him by the Board in excess of the quantity specified in paragraph X shall be the Grid Tariff.

XIII. The licensee shall have the right at any time on giving the Board prior notice in writing expiring at the end of a year of account of purchase at the Grid Tariff the whole of the electricity supplied to him by the Board:

Provided that the Board in those circumstances may make it a condition that the licensee shall, until the date on which the agreed effective capacity of the station becomes nil, pay to the Board in each year of account in addition to the Grid Tariff a sum equal to such proportion as the Board may fix of the annual charges by way of interest and depreciation ascertained in respect of the year under paragraph IX:

Provided further that after the expiration of the said notice, the licensee shall not be entitled at any time to purchase electricity from the Board at the price ascertained under paragraph XI.

THE FOURTH SCHEDULE.

(See sections 23 and 37 and First and Third Schedules.)

Price for undertakings, generating stations and main transmission lines purchased by the Board.

I. For the purposes of this Schedule—

(a) "date of vesting" means the date on which the undertaking, generating station, main transmission line or asset forming part of such station or line, as the case may be, vests in the Board;

(b) "original cost" of an asset means the amount of expenses certified or determined under paragraph II to have been properly incurred on and incidental to the provision of the asset for the purposes of the undertaking, generating station or main transmission line, as the case may be;

(c) "prescribed period" shall have the meaning assigned to it in the Sixth Schedule.

II. The price to be paid for any undertaking, generating station or main transmission line, as the case may be, purchased by the Board under this Act shall be such sum as may be certified by an auditor appointed by the Provincial Government in this behalf to have been the amount properly incurred on and incidental to the establishment of the undertaking, station or main transmission line, as the case may be, less depreciation thereon on the scale set out in paragraph III:

Provided that there shall be added to such sum as aforesaid on account of such purchase of the generating station or main transmission line such reasonable compensation as may be determined by the Board having due regard to the fact that a portion of the undertaking is to be acquired:

Provided further that if the Board or the licensee is dissatisfied with the sum so certified, the matter shall, in default of agreement between them, be determined as provided in section 76.

III. The scale of depreciation referred to in paragraph II shall be in respect of the portion of the prescribed period prior to the date of vesting,—

(a) for land owned under full title, including the cost of clearing the site, nil;

(b) for other assets specified in the Table appended to the Seventh Schedule, the amount which would be produced by the end of the said portion of the prescribed period if during that portion an allowance were made annually on account of depreciation in accordance with the provisions of paragraph VI of the Sixth Schedule.

IV. The auditor appointed under paragraph II shall be a person qualified under the provisions of section 144 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913 (VII of 1913), to act as an auditor of companies.

V. The auditor's costs under this Schedule shall be shared equally by the Board and the licensee concerned.

THE FIFTH SCHEDULE.

Charges for use by Board of transmission lines and main transmission lines.

I. The following charges and allowances shall be made in respect of a year of account for the use by the Board of main transmission lines or transmission lines (hereafter in this Schedule referred to as lines), namely:—

(a) the actual cost of maintenance of the lines, including renewals thereof not chargeable to capital account;

(b) sums paid in respect of the lines for insurance and as rents, rates and taxes (including super-tax payable by the licensee as a company but excluding other taxes on profits);

(c) the proportion of management and general establishment charges properly attributable to the lines;

THE SIXTH SCHEDULE.

Financial Principles and their Applications.

I. The licensee shall so adjust his rates for the sale of electricity by periodical revision that his clear profit in any year shall not as far as possible exceed the amount of reasonable return:

Provided that the licensee shall not be considered to have failed so to adjust his rates if the clear profit in any year of account has not exceeded the amount of the reasonable return by more than thirty per centum of the amount of the reasonable return.

II. (1) If the clear profit of a licensee in any year of account is in excess of the amount of reasonable return, one-third of such excess, not exceeding 7½ per cent. of the amount of reasonable return, shall be at the disposal of the undertaking. Of the balance of the excess, one-half shall be appropriated to a reserve which shall be called the Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve and the remaining half shall either be distributed in the form of a proportional rebate on the amounts collected from the sale of electricity and meter rentals or carried forward in the accounts of the licensee for distribution to the consumers in future, in such manner as the Provincial Government may direct.

(2) The Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve shall be available for disposal by the licensee only to the extent by which the clear profit is less than the reasonable return in any year of account.

(3) On the purchase of the undertaking under the terms of its licence any balance remaining in the Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve shall be handed over to the purchaser and maintained as such Tariffs and Dividends Control Reserve.

III. There shall be created from existing reserves or from the revenues of the undertaking a reserve to be called "Contingencies Reserve".

IV. (1) The licensee shall appropriate to Contingencies Reserve from the revenues of each year of account a sum not less than one quarter of one per centum and not more than one-half of one per centum of the original cost of fixed assets; provided that if the said reserve exceeds, or would by such appropriation, be caused to exceed, five per centum of the original cost of fixed assets, no appropriation shall be made which would have the effect of increasing the reserve beyond the said maximum.

(2) The amount of the Contingencies Reserve shall be invested in securities authorised under the Indian Trusts Act, 1882 (II of 1882).

V. The Contingencies Reserve shall not be drawn upon during the currency of the license except to meet such charges as the Provincial Government may approve as being—

(a) expenses or loss of profits arising out of accidents, strikes or circumstances which the management could not have prevented;

(b) expenses on replacement or removal of plant or works other than expenses requisite for normal maintenance or renewal;

(c) compensation payable under any law for the time being in force and for which no other provision is made.

VI. (1) There shall be allowed in each year in respect of depreciation of fixed assets employed in the business of electricity supply such an amount as would, if set aside annually throughout the prescribed period and accumulated at compound interest at 4 per centum per annum, produce by the end of the prescribed period an amount equal to 90 per cent. of the original cost of the asset after taking into account the sums already written off or set aside in the books of the undertaking. Annual interest on the accumulated balance will be allowed as an expense from revenue as well as the annual incremental deposit:

Provided that, within 3 months from the date upon which these Principles are enacted, a licensee may elect to adopt the Straight-line method of depreciation accounting in lieu of the compound interest method above prescribed. Straight-line method of depreciation accounting means the method whereby an allowance is made in each year in respect of depreciation of fixed assets employed in the business of such an amount as is arrived at by dividing ninety per cent. of the original cost of the asset by the prescribed period in respect of such asset.

(2) The year in which any asset becomes available for use in the business and the relative cost thereof shall, in the absence of satisfactory record be determined by the Provincial Government. All sums credited to depreciation account shall be invested only in the business of electricity supply of the undertaking or in investments, approved by the Provincial Government.

VII. (1) Where any fixed asset ceases to be available for use through obsolescence, inadequacy, superfluity or for any other reason, it shall be described in the books of the licensee as no longer in use and no further depreciation in respect thereof shall be allowed as a charge against revenue.

(2) The written down cost of such fixed asset shall be carried to a special account in the books of the licensee and the amount for which the asset is sold or the amount of its scrap value when actually realised shall be set off against the amount so carried.

(3) The written down cost which still remains to be written off in respect of such fixed asset shall be charged against the Contingencies Reserve by equal annual instalments from the year of account in which the asset ceases to be available for use as aforesaid up to the date of the next option of purchase of the undertaking under the licence or up to the expiration of the prescribed period, whichever is earlier.

VIII. When any asset has been written down in the books of the undertaking to 10 per cent. or less of its original cost, no further depreciation shall be allowed in respect of that asset.

IX. When any fixed asset is sold for an amount exceeding its written down cost the excess shall be credited to the Contingencies Reserve.

X. Except with the consent of the Provincial Government no sums shall be carried to a reserve, and no dividends in excess of 3 per cent. on share capital and no other distribution of profits shall be made to shareholders while any sum allowed in respect of depreciation for the year of account or any instalments due in respect of any arrears of depreciation as provided in paragraph XI remains to be written-off in the books of the undertaking.

XI. Arrears of depreciation calculated in accordance with paragraph VI may be written off by equated payments over the remainder of the prescribed period and the amount so set aside in the books of the undertaking may be taken into account in any year as a special appropriation for purposes of assessing the clear profit.

XII. Where contributions are made by consumers towards the cost of construction of service lines constructed after the date on which this Act comes into force only the net cost of such service lines after deducting such contributions shall be included in the cost of fixed assets for the purposes of arriving at the capital base:

Provided that for the purposes of depreciation under paragraph VI, the total original cost of construction of the service lines shall be taken into account.

XIII. (1) Subject to the provisions of sub-paragraph (2) the ordinary remuneration of a managing agent excluding the office allowance mentioned in sub-paragraph (3) but including purchasing commission, if any, shall be based on a percentage of net profits as defined in section 87(C)(3) of the Indian Companies Act, 1913 (VII of 1913), and shall not exceed—

(a) in respect of the first Rs. 5 lakhs of such net profits—10 per cent.; and

(3) An office allowance drawn by a managing agent which shall include the salaries and wages of all persons employed in the office of the managing agent, but not the salaries of the engineering staff employed for purposes of the undertaking, shall be a percentage of the operating expenditure and the expenditure during the year of account on capital works. The office allowance so drawn shall not exceed—

(a) In respect of the first Rs. 1 lakh of operating expenditure—8 per cent.

In respect of the next Rs. 2 lakhs of operating expenditure—5 per cent.

XV. (1) Where at any time within three years before the next option of purchase under the licence arises, the licensee proposes to make any capital expenditure which exceeds twenty-five thousand rupees or two per centum of the capital base, whichever is more, in respect of which any amount would in the event of purchase under the option be payable by the purchaser to the licensee, the licensee shall before giving effect to such proposal, apply to the Board or where no Board is constituted, the Provincial Government for its concurrence.

(2) If the Board or the Provincial Government, as the case may be, does not within one month from the receipt of such application, consent to such expenditure, the licensee may refer the matter to the arbitration of the Authority.

THE NINTH SCHEDULE.

(See the First Schedule.)

Allocation of costs of production at generating stations.

1. For the purposes of this Schedule—

(a) the average load factor of a station shall be expressed as a percentage, and shall be ascertained by multiplying the number of kilowatt-hours supplied from the station during the year of account by 100, and dividing the product so obtained by the product of the average monthly maximum demand multiplied by the number of hours during which the station was in commission in the year of account;

(b) the average monthly maximum demand shall be the arithmetical average of the monthly maximum demands on the station in those calendar months during which the station was in commission in the year of account;

(c) a station shall be deemed to be in commission when the whole or any portion of the plant in the station is generating electricity or is in readiness to generate electricity upon demand;

(d) "cost of fuel" means the sums expended for fuel consumed plus the cost of any transport, handling, preparation or treatment incurred in connection with the delivery of fuel to the boiler hoppers, furnaces or engines and in connection with the disposal of the products or residues of combustion, plus the proportion of salaries and wages and any contributions made by the owner of the station for pensions, provident fund, superannuation and insurance of officers and servants properly attributable to such delivery or disposal, less any sums received from the sale of any products or residues of combustion;

(e) "cost of oil, water and stores" means the sums expended for oil, water and stores consumed;

(f) "cost of repairs, maintenance and renewals" means the sums expended for repairs and maintenance and for renewals not chargeable to capital account, together with the proportion of salaries and wages and any contributions made by the owner of the station for pensions, provident fund, superannuation and insurance of officers and servants properly attributable to repairs, maintenance and renewals;

(g) "salaries and wages" means the sums expended for salaries and wages and any contributions made by the owner of the station for pensions, provident fund, superannuation and insurance of officers and servants, less the proportion of such sums properly attributable to the cost of fuel under clause (d) and to the cost of repairs, maintenance and renewals under clause (f).

II. Of the costs of production of electricity at a generating station ascertained in accordance with the Eighth Schedule, the following costs, charges and allowances in respect of the year of account shall be allocated at "fixed costs", namely:—

(a) of the costs, charges and allowances set out in clause (a) of paragraph I of the said Schedule, portions calculated from the appropriate formulae set out in paragraph III;

(b) the whole of the costs, charges and allowances set out in the remaining clauses of paragraph I of the said Schedule.

III. The portion of the following costs, charges and allowances to be allocated as fixed costs shall be ascertained from the formula hereinafter set out against each, namely:—

(a) cost of fuel .. .. $\dfrac{100}{100 + 12{\cdot}8\ L}$;

(b) cost of oil, water and stores $\dfrac{100}{100 + 9{\cdot}66\ L}$;

(c) salaries and wages .. $\dfrac{100}{100 + 0{\cdot}38\ L}$;

(d) cost of repairs, maintenance and renewals. $\dfrac{100}{100 + 0{\cdot}0001\ NL}$;

N = the number of hours during which the station was in commission in the year of account.

IV. The amount of the difference between the costs of production at a generating station ascertained in accordance with the Eighth Schedule and the fixed costs in respect of the year of account determined in accordance with this Schedule shall be allocated as "running costs".

V. The foregoing provisions of this Schedule shall not apply in any case where it is agreed between the Board and the owner of the station that the circumstances or conditions of operation in the station, whether temporary or continuing, are such that the said provisions ought not reasonably to be applied; and in such case the allocation between fixed costs and running costs shall be made in such manner as the Board and the said owner may agree.
